PUBLISHER'S NOTE

Welcome to the 26th edition of the Canadian Donor's Guide.

The purpose of the Guide remains the same as it always has been: to provide an authoritative annual directory to fundraising organizations in Canada.

Scotia Private Client Group is back for an eighth year as the Guide's sponsor. This means we continue to deliver at least 17,000 copies of our publication to key decision makers in Canada's donor community.

The Canadian Donor's Guide is published with the co-operation of the Canadian Association of Gift Planners (CAGP), the Canadian Bar Association, and Imagine Canada.

This year we continue a feature introduced last year: an expanded Editorial Section. We are able to do this by taking advantage of the Digital Edition of the 2011-12 Canadian Donor's Guide. This is an exact replica of the print version of the Guide that you have in front of you. You view it on a computer screen by accessing it on the Internet via our website at www.donorsguide.ca.

We have a strong lineup of contributors to this year's Editorial Section. However, in some cases their thoughtful articles and papers run to scores of pages. Our solution: provide one page in the print edition of the Guide for the first several hundred words or a summary of the article, and then insert a 'turn' to the full article by providing a link to it from the same page in the Digital Edition of the Guide.

A notion that continues to be debated in the charitable sector, and is now attracting interest in government circles, is that private capital could and should be freed up to address pressing issues in Canada. The March 2011 pre-election budget stated: "All across Canada, citizens, businesses, charities and other groups, such as the Canadian Task Force on Social Finance, are working together to develop innovative ways to address local challenges."

Former Prime Minister Paul Martin is a member of this Task Force, and last year in these pages he stated: "I think that there is much potential to be tapped by social enterprise organizations that borrow from the objectives of traditional charities on the one hand and the management principles of the private sector on the other, including, in certain cases, the need to ensure growth by showing profits and the possibility of providing a financial return on investment."

Starting on the next page, Ilse Treurnicht, Chair of the Task Force, summarizes the Task Force's findings and recommendations. At the end of her summary, you can find a link in our Digital Edition to its full report. However, not all informed opinion in the charitable sector agrees that Social Enterprise is a panacea, or indeed that the significant legislative and regulatory change being sought in its favour will unlock significant untapped investments to address social ills in this country.

Lynn Eakin's Opinion piece on page 28 of this section offers one such cautionary note. As does a point/counterpoint discussion between Don Bourgeois, Editor, The Philanthropist/ Le Philanthropie, and Bob Wyatt, Executive Director, Muttart Foundation, in the Vol. 23, No. 2 issue of

Anderson Charters
Publisher, Canadian Donor's Guide

The Philanthropist (www.thephilanthropist.ca). Says Wyatt: "Much ...being presented would already fall within acceptable charitable activities, provided the charity's purposes were broad enough to allow them."

Nevertheless, the debate regarding Social Enterprise might result in some modest but effective change to the rules and regulations that enable the charitable sector, that govern it, and that currently hem it in. My concern: how do we assist our elected representatives to understand this and then to enact the legislation that will be required to bring about change?

Charity law in Canada is complex, largely because the regulation of charities has, over time, become entwined in this country's voluminous Income Tax Act. It is quite understandable to assume no elected Member of Parliament, or a provincial assembly, unless he or she was a tax expert before entering politics, grasps the complexities of the Income Tax Act; and therefore understands the constraints faced by registered charities and other non-profit organizations.

It is the responsibility of those in the sector advocating for the changes they wish to see to figure out how to convince our elected representatives that these reforms are a priority. Sadly, the sector is too diffuse to have a critical mass of competence or the lobbying muscle that the private sector can mount in Ottawa or the provincial capitals.

To repeat one thought from last year: something that is sometimes necessary in Canada to effect substantial change – a Royal Commission on the Reform of Charity Regulation in Canada.

Mobilizing Private Capital for Capital Good

All across Canada, citizens, businesses, charities and other groups, such as the Canadian Task Force on Social Finance, are working together to develop innovative ways to address local challenges. The Government will take steps to complement community efforts by encouraging the development of government/community partnerships, enabling communities to tackle local challenges and testing new approaches to improve performance.” — March 2011 Pre-Election Tabled Canadian Federal Budget

Creating sustainable value is our 21st century challenge. The Federal Budget 2011, tabled before the election call, recognized that government can't do this alone, and research and experience suggest that strong cross-sectoral partnerships are required to cultivate the development of innovative solutions to our most pressing social needs. With provincial and federal budgets in cost-cutting mode, it's time to shift our thinking about expanding the resources for the community sector to do its vital work. For many working within that sector, or starting social purpose businesses in the for profit sector, they are already ahead of this paradigm shift. But their ability to scale is hampered by restrictive regulations and a serious lack of financing instruments.

Leading global economists like Jed Emerson are trumpeting the benefits of a blended value proposition for business. Others like Harvard University Professor Michael Porter explain that, “Companies must take the lead in bringing business and society back together. The solution lies in the principle of shared value, which involves creating economic value in a way that also creates value for society by addressing its needs and challenges.” (In The Big Idea by Michael Porter and Mark R. Kramer, Harvard Business Review, January-February, 2011)

Like Emerson and Porter, The Canadian Task Force on Social Finance believes that business has a critical role to play in building shared value and it must invest in a sustainable future. Comprised of business, public policy, and philanthropic leaders, the Task Force is concerned about the lack of capital available to address pressing social needs.

The Task Force was convened to determine how best to catalyze the creation of a financial marketplace serving social enterprises in the non-profit and for-profit realms. Essentially they examined how private investment capital could join with existing philanthropic and government capital pools to invest in innovative ways to solve social challenges.

As Rockefeller Foundation President Judith Rodin aptly points out, “While there is not enough money in foundation and government coffers to meet the defining tests of our time, there is enough money. It's just locked up in private investments.” (Judith Rodin, President of the Rockefeller Foundation at the Generation Investment Management Global Client Conference (May 2010).)

The report released by the Task Force in December 2010, Mobilizing Private Capital for Public Good, offers an integrated national strategy for building Canada's social finance marketplace. It comprises seven recommendations that Canada needs to undertake, in parallel, to mobilize new sources of capital, create an enabling tax and regulatory environment, and build a pipeline of investment-ready social enterprises.

Recommendation One is a direct call to action for the philanthropic community: To maximize their impact in fulfilling their mission, Canada's public and private foundations should invest at least 10% of their capital in mission-related investments (MRI) by 2020. Working together, the Community Foundations of Canada (CFC), Philanthropic Foundations of Canada (PFC) and leading private foundations are moving on the realization of this goal already.

Dr. Ilse Treurnicht
Canadian Task Force on Social Finance

A growing number of enterprising charities, non-profits, co-operatives and social entrepreneurs are building businesses and turning to private investors for the financing they need to launch and scale up innovative new programs, become sustainable, meet a broader range of community needs, and stimulate economic growth. As a result, new investment opportunities, leveraging different instruments, are emerging to offer investors a range of positive financial returns and substantial social and environmental impacts.

Our challenge now is to strengthen this emerging marketplace by mobilizing capital and putting in place the intermediary institutions, frameworks and regulations that will more efficiently connect the best people and the most innovative ideas to the private capital they need to tackle complex societal problems, create jobs, and strengthen communities. As a partner in this effort, governments need to work across jurisdictions to streamline federal-territorial-provincial (FTP) roles and to coordinate policy.

As the Mowat Centre for Policy Innovation articulated, “...there is no venue for provinces and territories to discuss issues affecting the sector, let alone to begin the process of lowering interprovincial barriers to a more sustainable non-profit sector.” In their seminal report, Strengthening the Third Pillar of the Canadian Union the Mowat Centre concentrates its recommendations on eliminating policy and regulatory barriers, endorsing the Task Force's comprehensive agenda.

The recommendations in Mobilizing Capital for Public Good are supported by evidence and experiences from across Canada, and from other jurisdictions like the United Kingdom and United States, that are leading the challenging work of mobilizing private capital to support public benefit opportunities.

Some will argue that, in the current environment of economic uncertainty and fiscal constraint, we cannot afford to invest in bold new ideas. We believe the contrary. Everything we have read and heard as a Task Force reinforces our conviction that:

1. Growing public benefit enterprising initiatives require more sustainable and innovative sources financing if they are to meet the scale and complexity of the societal challenges that lie ahead;
2. Governments and donors are challenged to significantly expand their contribution to this effort at the scale required under current funding frameworks but their current contributions could be much more effectively leveraged; and

3. There are significant opportunities for private capital to enter the marketplace – but only if we create the enabling environment and infrastructure that makes it possible for them to do so.

Since launching Mobilizing Private Capital for Public Good, the investment sector, governments, and the social enterprise sector have stepped forward to express their interest in advancing the Task Force recommendations. Energetic clusters of activity are coalescing around many of the actions needed to see them realized.

As Task Force Chair, it has been extremely encouraging to see the growing momentum that will lead to full implementation across sectors over the coming years. In the report's introduction I wrote that our goal was to raise awareness of social finance and stimulate a national discussion about a new partnership model between profit and public good. Given the activity already underway in responding to our agenda, I am confident that we will exceed our expectations.

As we move through 2011, the Task Force will keep Canadians informed of developments catalyzed by its recommendations and the initiatives forming to pursue a robust marketplace for social finance in Canada. We will report at the end of 2011 on the progress within year one of that journey.

CHARITY CHECKLIST

Working with Charities When Planning a Bequest

When planning your estate, should you contact charitable beneficiaries to inform them of a bequest? Traditionally, the answer to this question has been “no”. But practice is changing. Charitable bequests are becoming more common, donors more knowledgeable, and charities more sophisticated.

If you are making a charitable bequest you should, at the very least, contact charitable beneficiaries anonymously to ensure your lawyer has the correct legal name. Registered charities sometimes have an operating name that is different than their legal name. An incorrect name or designation could cause your gift to fail, which creates legal costs for your estate and trouble for your executor and other beneficiaries. The Canadian Donor's Guide is the perfect first step in this process. The basic search feature at CharityCan — www.charitycan.ca — contains all Canadian registered charities. Canada Revenue Agency also lists all registered charities online at www.cra-arc.gc.ca/tax/charities.

There is, however, more to making a bequest than spelling the name of the charity correctly. A bequest is probably the largest gift of your life so don't be shy about asking a few critical questions of your intended charitable beneficiaries. If the contemplated bequest is significant in value or central to your estate plan, arrange a meeting with the charity to ask questions in person. The following due diligence checklist will help you make your legacy gift more effective, prudent, and personally meaningful.

The Charitable Bequest Checklist

1) Use of bequests: What is the charity's policy on the use of undesignated bequests and planned gifts? Are they spent immediately or are they invested? Are they used to pay a deficit, support fundraising, or pay for the direct programs and services of the charity?

2) Accountability: Are the charity's annual report and audited statement available to the public? Will the charity send the annual report to the donor after the gift is confirmed? What percentage of annual revenue is devoted to charitable activities?

3) Gift designation: Does the charity enable donors to designate to a particular area or activity? What are purposes that are expected to be future priorities?

4) Personal endowment funds: Does the charity have an endowment that is invested to provide an annual payout for its charitable activities? Are donors able to name endowment funds with their bequest? If so, is there a minimum contribution level to establish the fund? Does the charity provide donors with financial and activity reports on individual endowment funds?

5) Privacy Policy: Does the charity have a privacy policy? Can a donor remain anonymous? If the donor is anonymous, who at the charity will know about your bequest intentions? Can the donor specify no solicitations or unwanted contact? Does the charity trade or sell names to other charities or organizations?

6) Donor recognition: Are donors of bequests and planned gifts recognized after the gifts are received? Does the charity have an optional program to recognize and involve future gift donors during life?

Malcolm D. Burrows
Scotia Private Client Group

7) Other Types of Planned Gifts: Does the charity help donors explore tax-advantageous alternatives to bequests, such as charitable gift annuities, life insurance, and gifts of RRSP/RRIFs?

8) Staff Gift Planner: Does the charity have a staff Gift Planner or Planned Giving Officer? Does he or she have any professional designations? Has the planner adopted the Canadian Association of Gift Planners' Standards of Ethical and Professional Conduct?

9) Charity Leadership: How long has the CEO of the charity been in his/her role? What is the average tenure of staff and directors?

10) Charitable Effectiveness: Can the charity provide a concise summary of its charitable mission? Can it provide three examples of recent initiatives that have made a difference?

While the issues on this checklist will vary in importance to each person, the key consideration is how the charity deals with an inquisitive donor or advisor. Most charities appreciate passionate donors, so please, go ahead and ask tough questions. Ultimately, trust is the most important factor when making a gift of a portion of your life savings. Trust should be earned, not assumed.

CHARITABLE DONATIONS

A Summary of Tax Considerations

OVERVIEW

Tax consequences are important in structuring charitable gifts, since proper planning can increase the benefits to the donor. The tax benefits are often a major incentive for charitable giving and should be carefully considered from the outset.

A gift to a registered charity by an individual (including a trust) entitles the donor to a non-refundable tax credit, i.e. a deduction in computing tax otherwise payable, whereas a gift by a corporation entitles it to a deduction in computing taxable income, as opposed to a tax credit. These rules are found in section 118.1 of the Income Tax Act (the “ITA”) for gifts by individuals and section 110.1 of the ITA for gifts by corporations.

2011 BUDGET PROPOSALS

In its March 22, 2011 budget, the federal government announced significant changes in many rules dealing with the non-profit sector, some of which will be relevant to donors. These include changes in the regime for qualified donees (a term which includes, but is not limited to registered charities), changes dealing with registered Canadian amateur athletic associations (“RCAAs”), more stringent rules dealing with non-qualifying securities, new rules dealing with governance of registered charities and RCAAs, rules dealing with gifts returned by a qualified donee to a donor, elimination of the “double-dip” tax advantage for donations of flow-through shares and changes in the rules for donations of options.

BASIC TAX RULES Individuals

An individual who makes a gift to a charity is entitled to a credit against tax otherwise payable. For purposes of this summary, the references to a “charity” include generally charities which are registered by Canada Revenue Agency (“CRA”), RCAAs, certain non-profit housing corporations, Canadian municipalities, the crown, the United Nations and certain foreign charities (including certain foreign universities).

Where the gift is less than $200, the federal tax credit is calculated at the lowest personal tax rate on the amount of the gift. Where the gift exceeds $200, the credit is 29% of the amount of the gift. A comparable tax credit is also available in calculating provincial taxes, with special rules applicable in Quebec.

An individual can claim a tax credit for a charitable gift of up to 75% of net income for the year. Any unused credit can be carried forward for five years and used to offset taxes in those years, subject to the 75% limit in each year. The limit does not apply in the year of death or the previous year. Unused credits not applied in the year of death can be used in the prior year, without any limit based on income.

The 75% limit is increased by an additional 25% of any taxable capital gain realized by the donor as a result of making a gift of appreciated capital property, plus 25% of the amount of any recapture of capital cost allowance realized on a gift of depreciable property (to a maximum of 25% of the lesser of the capital cost or the fair market value of the depreciable property).

*James M. Parks

CRA's administrative position on gifts and receipts is set out in IT-110R3 entitled “Gifts and Official Donation Receipts”. In addition, useful comments are set out in a number of CRA newsletters, policy statements and consultation drafts. These newsletters, interpretation bulletins, policy statements and other information from CRA can be viewed on the CRA website at www.cra-arc.gc.ca. There is a section on the website aimed at charities and donors, called “Charities and Giving”.

Corporations

A corporation that makes a gift to a charity is entitled to a deduction in computing taxable income. However, the corporation is also subject to the income limits noted above for individuals. The corporation can claim a deduction of up to 75% of its net income for the year. If the corporation makes a gift of appreciated capital property, the limit is increased by 25% of the taxable capital gain and 25% of any recapture of capital cost allowance realized on a gift of depreciable property (to a maximum of 25% of the lesser of the capital cost or the fair market value of the depreciable property).

TYPES OF GIFTS

The following are some basic features and tax consequences of certain types of gifts.

1. Gifts by Will

states in a will that on death, property is to be given as a bequest or legacy to a specified charity or a charity to be chosen by the executors. The gift can be cash or property, such as a work of art or shares. If the testator leaves too much discretion to the executors in choosing a charity or the amount of the gift, CRA may allege the gift is made by the estate and not deemed to be made in the year of death.

Otherwise, the testator is deemed to have made the gift immediately before the date of death. Therefore, in the terminal return for the year of death, a tax credit is available in computing tax otherwise payable. Any unused tax credits in the year of death can be carried back and used to reduce taxes payable in the prior year. The credit is available to offset 100% of net income for the year of death and the prior year. This credit is of particular benefit in calculating tax otherwise payable in the year of death, since the deceased is deemed to have disposed of all capital assets immediately before death (subject to certain exceptions, such as for spousal rollovers) at fair market value, thereby realizing capital gains in the year of death.

In a recent technical interpretation, CRA stated that, consistent with its administrative policy allowing spouses to decide which of them can claim credit for a donation, regardless of the name on the official receipt, where a charitable gift is made by an individual in his or her will, and is deemed to be made in the year of death, a surviving spouse will have the option of claiming donations made by the deceased spouse in the year of death.

2. Annuities

Prior to December 20, 2002 a donor could transfer cash to a charity which undertook to pay an annuity for life to the donor, or perhaps to the donor and a spouse, as long as one of them was alive. The annuity payment received by the donor would be a blend of interest and capital, and only the interest portion would normally be taxable. If the donor transferred cash to the charity in excess of the amount expected to be received over the term of the annuity, the excess was considered under CRA's administrative policy to be a gift and the charity could issue a tax receipt for the excess. CRA's policy as stated in IT-111R2 entitled "Annuities Purchased from Charitable Organizations" was not to tax any portion of an annuity payment received by a donor in such circumstances.

If the donor died earlier than expected, the charity would keep the remaining funds. If the donor lived beyond the life expectancy, the charity had to meet its commitments and might need to use other funds to do so.

Only charitable organizations can issue annuities without adverse tax consequences. Foundations can be deregistered if they incur ineligible debt obligations. Furthermore, a charity must ensure that it has authority to issue annuities pursuant to provincial laws dealing with insurance or other relevant laws. In many cases, the charity will purchase an annuity from a financial institution rather than issuing it itself, to reduce its risk of loss.

The Department of Finance announced a number of proposed changes on December 20, 2002. These proposals were modified on December 5, 2003, in response to so-called "art flip" transactions, and eventually introduced in Bill C-33 in November, 2006 and again in Bill C-10 in November, 2007, after Bill C-33 died when Parliament prorogued. Bill C-10 also died on the order paper. The proposed changes have not been enacted as at April 30, 2011. Nevertheless, CRA is administering the law as if these changes were in place, since they will be retroactive.

One major change deals with the measurement of a gift where the donor receives some advantage in exchange, to deal with "split-receipting". CRA has changed its administrative policy dealing with annuities and no longer applies the administrative policy in IT-111R2 for annuities issued after December 20, 2002. CRA has acknowledged that its earlier administrative position has no basis in law and cannot be continued in the face of the proposed changes. Under the proposed changes, the value of property received from a charity in exchange for a gift must be determined and that value will become the cost of that property to the charity. As a result, where an amount is transferred to a charity by a donor and the advantage received by the donor is a stream of annuity payments, the amount of the gift will be equal to the excess of the amount transferred by the donor to the charity over the amount that would be required to purchase an annuity that would provide the same payments. CRA has stated that despite the withdrawal of its administrative position, it expects charitable annuities to continue as a means of fundraising which could be more advantageous to the donor than in the past.

In an example mentioned by CRA, for a donor with a life expectancy of eight years, who actually lives for eight years and makes a cash payment of $100,000, in exchange for annuity payments of $10,000 for each of those eight years, the cost of the annuity that will pay $80,000 over eight years is $50,000. Under the former administrative practice, the donor would be entitled to a tax receipt for $20,000 in the year of the payment and would receive a total of $80,000 as annuity payments tax-free. Under the proposed changes, the donor will receive a tax receipt for $50,000 in the year of the gift, and will receive $80,000 in annuity payments, of which $30,000 will be included in income over the eight years, as blended payments.

3. Life Insurance

A charity can benefit from gifts of insurance policies in several ways. From the donor's point of view, a gift of an insurance policy allows a large donation, at a relatively small cost to the donor. CRA's administrative position on donations of life insurance policies is set out in IT-244R3 entitled "Gifts by Individuals of Insurance Policies as Charitable Donations".

A charity can purchase a life insurance policy on the donor's life on the understanding that the donor will pay the premiums directly to the insurance company. This is often supported by a pledge to pay the premiums. The charity can issue a tax receipt to the donor for the premiums paid. On the death of the donor, the charity will receive the death benefit, but it will not be a gift by the donor. The major drawback from the charity's point of view is that there is no way to ensure that the donor will pay the premiums. However, if the donor fails to pay, the charity can surrender the policy or pay the premiums out of its own funds.

Alternatively, the donor can transfer an existing policy to the charity and undertake to pay future premiums. The charity can issue a receipt for the fair market value of the gift, which may be the cash surrender value of the policy (normally only whole life or universal life policies will have a value) less any outstanding policy loans. The charity can issue a tax receipt for the premiums paid. There may be an inclusion in income of the donor on a gift of a policy if the fair market value of the policy exceeds its tax cost. CRA has acknowledged that the cash surrender value may not necessarily be the fair market value of the policy. In particular, CRA has stated that, consistent with standard valuation principles applicable to other types of property, the fair market value of a policy should be determined based on all of the relevant factors. As a result, if a qualified valuator determines that the fair market value of the policy exceeds its cash surrender value (less any outstanding policy loans) that higher amount can be shown as the eligible amount in a receipt issued by the charity. CRA has also confirmed that in determining the income that must be reported by the donor on a gift of a policy to a charity, the cash surrender value rather than the fair market value will be relevant. As a result, the donor will be subject to tax on the amount by which the cash surrender value (less any outstanding policy loans) exceeds the adjusted cost basis (a defined term) of the policy. CRA has confirmed that this will not be affected by the issuance of an official receipt by the charity reflecting a fair market value that is higher than the cash surrender value.

In some cases, if the charity is concerned that it will not be able to pay the premiums on a policy it acquires as a gift, the donor may make a further cash gift, which the charity can use to purchase an annuity to provide regular payments to pay the premiums as they become due. The cash payment should be eligible as a separate gift and the charity will generally be able to treat the annuity, along with the insurance policy itself, in a manner that does not cause problems in meeting its disbursement quota. Alternatively, the charity might rely on a promise from the donor (or another donor) to make annual donations to pay the premiums. This would create some risk for the charity. The ability of the charity to continue to pay the premiums on a donated policy may be a factor in determining the eligible amount of the gift based on the fair market value of the policy.

If there is reason to believe that the policy will lapse because the charity does not have funds to pay the premiums, the fair market value of the policy may be adversely affected. A registered charity is not required to pay tax on its income and should not be adversely affected if a life insurance policy is not an “exempt” policy and as the policyholder it must report income for tax purposes. I understand some charities acquire life insurance policies that are fully paid up within three to five years, with no requirement for a medical, paying the premiums with cash donations from the donor (usually the person whose life is insured). The insurance company apparently relies on a statement of good health from the insured person.

The proposed changes now address this. The eligible amount of a gift of a life insurance policy will be the lesser of its fair market value and the “cost” of the policy to the donor, if the gift is made within three years of the day on which the policy is acquired, under the proposed amendments discussed below. In some situations, the value of the gift could be less than expected if the policy has not been held for at least three years.

As a further alternative, the donor whose life is insured can continue to own the policy, and name the charity as the beneficiary. The donor will receive no tax relief for the premiums paid or the value of the policy, since nothing currently is being given to the charity. Under insurance law, the donor can change the beneficiary from the charity to another person. If the charity is the named beneficiary, it will receive the death benefit on the donor's death. The donor is deemed to have made a gift to the charity immediately before death, if the charity receives the death benefit under the policy within 36 months after death. The fair market value of the gift is deemed to be the fair market value, at the time of the individual's death, of the right to that transfer. The Department of Finance stated when these rules were introduced that “in nearly all cases” the fair market value at death of the right to transfer is “expected to be” the fair market value at death of the money that is ultimately received.

A donor can also use life insurance proceeds to pay a bequest in a will to a charity. The donor who owns an insurance policy can fund the bequest, naming the estate as beneficiary of the policy. The will would include a bequest equal to the death benefit from the insurance policy. On the donor's death, the estate would pay the bequest to the charity and receive the life insurance proceeds free of tax. The charity would issue a receipt for the amount of the bequest. The gift could then be used to reduce tax in the terminal return or in the return for the prior year, if there are excess credits. In some provinces, probate tax on the value of the proceeds passing through the estate may be a factor. A direct designation of a charity as a beneficiary will be treated as a donation in the year of death of the insured.

In some situations, a more complex arrangement might be used, involving shared benefits of some of the features of the policy or split ownership of the policy itself. Some plans involve shares of private corporations, corporate-owned insurance and share redemptions funded with insurance proceeds. This type of planning raises a number of regulatory and tax issues and requires sophisticated advice for both the donor and the charity.

4. Gifts of Residual Interests

A donor can give property to a charity, but maintain the right to use the property for his or her lifetime. Alternatively, the donor can establish a charitable remainder trust by transferring cash assets to a trust, reserving a right to receive payments for life and transferring the balance on death to a charity. CRA's administrative position on this type of gift is set out in IT-226R, entitled “Gifts to a Charity of a Residual Interest in Real Property or an Equitable Interest in a Trust”. If certain conditions are met, CRA considers the donor has made a gift which will qualify for a tax receipt. This type of gift could be made during a person's lifetime or by a will. It is necessary to value the residual interest. This value will be the fair market value of the transferred property (usually cash) less the present value of the reserved interest, taking into account an appropriate discount rate, the life expectancy of the donor, current interest rates and any other relevant circumstances. This type of gift is analogous to a charitable annuity. If there is a right to encroach on the capital of the property, CRA takes the view that the value of the residual interest will be nil. A trust will generally be required for gifts of property other than real estate, so a residual interest in the trust is donated to the charity.

For example, an individual donor may wish to donate a work of art to a charity, but retain possession of the art until her death. In these circumstances, if the donor transfers title in the art to a trust of which the charity is the residual beneficiary at the time of the gift, the donor has made a gift of a residual interest in the trust, the value of which is based on the factors mentioned above. A gift of a residual interest may result in a capital gain to the donor if the value of the property exceeds its adjusted cost base, determined in accordance with a formula applied by CRA.

In 2000, CRA stated that the gift of a beneficial interest in the capital of a charitable remainder trust would not automatically be treated as a gift of a non-qualifying security, but the general anti-avoidance rule might apply if the trust held non-qualifying securities. More recently, CRA stated that in determining whether a gift of a beneficial interest in the capital of a trust is a non-qualifying security, it will consider whether the trust is “affiliated” with the donor immediately after the gift was made. If the donor retains a beneficial interest in the income of the trust, the donor may be “affiliated” with the trust. Whether this is the case will be a question of fact. A trust and a person are affiliated if the person is a “majority-interest beneficiary”. This includes a person who has a beneficial interest in the income of the trust if it has a fair market value that is greater than 50% of the fair market value of all beneficial interests. It also includes a person where that person and an affiliated person together hold beneficial interests in the income of the trust if the fair market value of those interests is greater than 50% of all of the fair market value of all beneficial interests.

Using a charitable remainder trust or a gift of a residual interest often involves reliance on administrative policies of CRA and raises a number of technical issues. The Department of Finance is considering changes in the ITA dealing with charitable remainder trusts, but no amendments have been introduced. Specific advice should be sought before this type of planning is utilized.

5. Gifts of Capital Property

A donor of capital property is deemed to have received proceeds of disposition equal to the fair market value of the property. If the fair market value exceeds the cost, a capital gain will be realized. The capital gains inclusion rate is 50%. In addition, if the property is depreciable property, there may be recapture of capital cost allowance previously claimed, which is fully included in income.

A donor can reduce capital gains tax on a gift of appreciated capital property to a charity, by designating in the tax return in the year in which the gift is made, the transfer price as an amount not greater than the fair market value of the property and not less than its adjusted cost base. The donor will then be deemed to have disposed of the property for the designated amount and considered to have made a gift of the designated amount when calculating the tax credit or deduction. This permits the donor to avoid a capital gain altogether, or create the desired amount of capital gain (for example to offset capital losses). Certain restrictions apply in the case of a non-resident individual disposing of Canadian real estate to a charity.

For gifts of securities traded on a designated stock exchange (such as shares, bonds, warrants and debentures) and mutual fund shares or units or shares or interests in certain segregated funds, the amount to be included as a taxable capital gain is nil. It is thus more tax-efficient for the donor to give such securities directly to a charity, rather than sell them and give the proceeds to the charity.

Ordinarily, an employee who exercises a stock option is taxed on a benefit equal to the difference between the fair market value of the shares at the time of exercise and the sum of the exercise price plus the amount paid for the option. In certain circumstances, the employee can claim a deduction against the stock option benefit so the taxable portion of the benefit is equal to the taxable portion of a capital gain (50% currently). Where an employee stock option is exercised for marketable securities which are given to a qualified donee within 30 days of the option being exercised and certain other conditions are met, the taxable benefit is reduced to one-quarter of the benefit. Individuals who make qualifying donations of marketable securities acquired through such stock options are not required to include any amount of the benefit.

Taxpayers who own eligible unlisted exchangeable securities can exchange them without causing tax to be payable on a gain. There is no tax on a gain on the exchange, and the donor can receive a receipt for the donation of the listed securities received on the exchange, again without recognizing a gain. The beneficial treatment for capital gains on gifts of marketable securities applies to capital gains on the exchange (with some exceptions) of unlisted securities for listed securities where:

- (a) at the time they were issued, the unlisted securities included a condition allowing the holder to exchange them for the listed securities;
- (b) the listed securities are the only consideration received on the exchange; and
- (c) the listed securities are donated within 30 days after the exchange.

There are special rules for exchangeable partnership interests. These are intended to ensure that gains attributable to a reduction in the adjusted cost base of the partnership interest are not exempt.

A gift of a “non-qualifying security” to a charity will be ignored in determining the tax deduction or credit in most cases. A non-qualifying security generally includes an obligation of the donor or a non-arm’s length person, a share issued by a corporation with which the donor does not deal at arm’s length, or any other security issued by the individual or a non-arm’s length person. Specifically excepted are obligations, shares or securities listed on prescribed stock exchanges and deposits with financial institutions.

If the property is disposed of within five years of receipt of the gift, or the property ceases to be a “non-qualifying security” within the five year period, the individual will be treated as having made a gift at that time. This rule does not apply to an “excepted gift”, which is generally a gift of a share made to an arm’s length qualified donee that is not a private foundation, and where the donee is a charitable organization or a public foundation, the donor deals at arm’s length with all of the donee’s directors and officers. CRA considers the relevant time when the donor must deal at arm’s length with the donee is immediately after the gift. The objective of these rules is to deny a tax credit for certain types of gifts, including shares of privately held companies, subject to some relief if the donee disposes of the security within five years. The rules apply where the non-qualifying security is donated to a trust of which the registered charity is a beneficiary.

Provisions dealing with “loan-back” arrangements apply where a person donates property to a charity which is not dealing at arm’s length with the person and receives a loan from the charity, or is allowed to use the property donated to the charity. The fair market value of the gift is reduced for purposes of calculating the tax credit. These rules apply to certain arm’s length arrangements. CRA’s administrative position on gifts of capital property is set out in IT-288R2 entitled “Gifts of Capital Properties to a Charity and Others” and IT-297R2 entitled “Gifts in Kind to Charity and Others”.

The Federal Court of Appeal has held that a donor of a “non-qualifying security” could claim a deduction later when the security was sold and replaced. The charity received a gift of promissory notes issued by a corporation that was controlled by the donor. It sold them to a business associate of the donor for new notes. CRA argued that the donor and the purchaser were not dealing at arm’s length and the new notes continued to be “non-qualifying”. Based on the facts, the court held that when the charity sold the notes and received similar notes from the purchaser, there was a “reliable basis” for treating the face value of the original notes as their fair market value at the time of the gift. CRA argued that the rules were intended to prevent a donor from claiming relief for a gift while retaining control over the funds and the charity had simply substituted notes from the purchaser for notes of the corporation controlled by the donor. The court distinguished between the “loan-back” rules and the broader rules dealing with “non-qualifying securities” and found nothing offensive in the way the charity sold the notes to permit the donor to claim tax relief. Significantly, the court found that despite the business relationship between the donor and the purchaser, they were dealing at arm’s length. The court rejected an argument that the general anti-avoidance rule denied tax relief for the gift in the later year.

The March 22, 2011 budget proposed new rules for non-qualifying securities. If those proposals are enacted, in determining eligibility for a tax credit or tax deduction, recognition of a gift will be deferred until the time within five years of the donation that the qualified donee has disposed of the non-qualifying security for consideration that is not, to any person, another non-qualifying security. An anti-avoidance rule was proposed to ensure that, if as a result of a series of transactions, a particular person holds a non-qualifying security of a donor and the donee has acquired a non-qualifying security of that person or of the donor, the gift will be deferred until such time (within five years of the donation) as the donee disposes of the non-qualifying security for consideration that is not another non-qualifying security of any person.

CRA has confirmed in an advance ruling that in appropriate situations donors can donate listed “flow-through” shares that are subject to a “monetization” arrangement enabling a charity to sell them immediately, despite securities law restrictions, to a third party that agrees to provide liquidity.

Although CRA did not rule on the fair market value of the flow-through shares at the time of the donation, it seems that it is approving these types of arrangements. The fact that listed shares are subject to a holding period for securities law purposes should not result in a substantial discount of what would otherwise be the fair market value. Flow-through shares provide the shareholder with an immediate tax benefit for deductions that are renounced by the corporation on account of Canadian exploration expenses or investment tax credits, but the adjusted cost base of the share is reduced correspondingly.

If the shareholder donates the shares, there is not only no tax on the resulting capital gain, but there is also a tax credit available based on the fair market value of the shares. This is assumed to be the price at which the charity is able to sell the shares to the third party. The deduction, the elimination of tax on the capital gain and the charitable tax credit all reduce the overall tax cost of the initial investment and the subsequent donation. The charity (or other qualified donee) is not concerned about lack of liquidity or valuation issues and in effect has a guarantee that it will be able to sell the shares immediately, receiving the agreed-upon amount from a third party. Although significant transaction costs are involved, in many cases these arrangements seem to provide a way for donors and qualified donees to achieve mutually beneficial results. Before proceeding, donors and qualified donees should carefully review the terms of the advance ruling and obtain professional advice about all aspects of the proposal.

CRA has stated that the exclusion of a flow-through share from the definition of “tax shelter” is limited to those situations in which the share has not been acquired as part of a “gifting arrangement”. In some situations, a third party “promoter” obtains a tax shelter registration number. In others, donors make arrangements directly with issuers of flow-through shares and charities. In those circumstances, donors should seek advice on whether a tax shelter registration number is required, since failure to obtain a registration number could result in the disallowance of credits or deductions that would otherwise be available. Charities that expect to receive gifts of flow-through shares may wish to advise donors of the potential risks if there is no tax shelter registration number. As discussed below, the March 22, 2011 budget proposals would affect flow-through share donations.

In a recent decision, the Tax Court of Canada treated payments under a tax shelter arrangement involving leveraged loans as an investment rather than as a gift. Without relying on the proposed “split-receipting” rules, the court held that the taxpayer did not make a gift at all (even of the cash portion) to the charity because a significant benefit flowed to the taxpayer. The CRA website contains information about potential problems for donors dealing with tax shelters and other arrangements that involve the issuance of official receipts for more than a cash donation made with no strings attached. It is no secret that CRA will challenge arrangements that seem to be “too good to be true”, particularly where the donor does not just pay cash or transfer property, but is involved in a more complex arrangement with a charity, a promoter or others.

In another recent decision, the Tax Court held that original drawings given to a registered charity by an editorial cartoonist were not personal-use property and were not subject to the $1,000 deemed adjusted cost base rule discussed below. In addition, as a result of a separate proceeding in civil court, gifts by the cartoonist to his wife, who made the gifts to the charity and other donees, were set aside on consent in a rectification proceeding and the gifts to the donees were treated by court order as gifts by the cartoonist himself. CRA had not permitted the cartoonist and his wife to rely on its administrative policy that permits spouses to choose which of them will claim relief for charitable donations made by one of them.

In another recent decision, the Tax Court of Canada dealt with whether property was personal use property. A collection of over 2,000 insects had been assembled by the donor, kept in storage boxes and donated to a qualified donee. The court held that she did not “use” them in the sense required to cause them to be personal use property. The court also held that the insects had been appraised individually and they did not collectively constitute a “set” that could not be divided in determining the deemed adjusted cost base of each item. Therefore, each insect had a deemed adjusted cost base of $1,000. Had the collection been treated as a set, all of the insects taken together would have had a collective adjusted cost base of $1,000.

CRA has stated that where an individual owns “thin” controlling voting shares of a private corporation, under which she is not entitled to receive dividends or to participate beyond a nominal amount on winding up, but controls the corporation, in some circumstances it will treat the shares as having more than a nominal value. A gift of those shares to a registered charity could offer flexibility in dealing with the valuation issue, particularly if an election is made to treat the amount of the gift as the adjusted cost base of the shares. However, this could raise a number of other issues, including potential problems under the excess business holdings rules for private foundations (as discussed below) and “acquisition of control” issues for public foundations and private foundations.

As discussed more fully below, the proposed amendments (last introduced in former Bill C-10) will significantly change the rules for determining the value of gifts of property in many situations.

6. Gifts of Art, Cultural and Ecological Property

(i) Art

Certain gifts of inventory by an artist receive special treatment. In those circumstances, where an appropriate designation is made, an artist is entitled to a credit based on the fair market value of the property but no income is triggered on the disposition.

Artwork is generally considered to be personal-use property unless it is inventory. Personal-use property is property that is used primarily for the personal use or enjoyment and includes jewellery, clothing, furniture, and certain works of art. For purposes of calculating the capital gain or loss, the adjusted cost base and proceeds of disposition of personal-use property are deemed to be at least $1,000. This rule eases the compliance and administrative burden associated with the reporting of dispositions of personal-use property. The $1,000 deemed adjusted cost base and deemed proceeds of disposition for personal-use property will not apply if the property is acquired after February 27, 2000, as part of an arrangement in which the property is given to a charity. Therefore, where this type of property with a value of less than $1,000 is donated to a charity in those circumstances, it will no longer be treated as personal-use property, and any resulting capital gain will be taxable.

(ii) Cultural Property

A gift of certified cultural property to a designated institution will not trigger a capital gain. The donor will be allowed a credit (if an individual) or a deduction (if a corporation) for the fair market value of the property and will not be limited to 75% of income. There are special rules for determining the fair market value of cultural property. In addition, any capital gain on an object that is donated is exempt from tax. The determination is made by the Canadian Cultural Property Export Review Board and there are extensive rules for the procedures to be followed and appeals if the amount determined is not acceptable to the donor. The Board must certify the property and designate the institution.

Any unused credits or deductions can be carried forward for five years, or back one year in the event of death. Charities receiving gifts of cultural property are subject to a penalty tax in certain circumstances if they dispose of the gifted property within ten years of its receipt. CRA's administrative position on gifts by artists is set out in IT-504R2 entitled “Visual Artists and Writers”, and its position on gifts of cultural property set out in IT-407R4 entitled “Dispositions of Cultural Property to Designated Canadian institutions”.

(iii) Ecological Property

There are similar rules for gifts of ecologically sensitive property to the crown, a municipality or a charity that is approved for the conservation and protection of the environment. There are incentives for owners of ecologically sensitive land to protect that land while at the same time qualifying for a tax benefit. The precise nature of the conveyance of property will depend on legal issues and in some cases there may be split ownership.

There are special valuation rules for gifts of ecological property. These include gifts of the land itself and gifts of easements over the land. The use of easements provides some flexibility, permitting the owner to retain legal title while fettering its future use and preventing development, but this can raise difficult valuation issues in some cases. The fair market value will be determined by the Minister of the Environment and there are extensive rules for the procedures to be followed and appeals if the amount determined is not acceptable to the donor. As in the case of gifts of cultural property, a charity accepting a gift is subject to a penalty if it disposes of the property within ten years or changes its use without the consent of the Minister of the Environment. Under the Ecological Gifts Program, Environment Canada certifies that land is ecologically sensitive and an expert panel certifies the value.

Gains realized on gifts made after May 1, 2006 are exempt. Where gifts were made prior to that date, 50% of the gain is taxable.

7. Gifts of Inventory

Unlike gifts of capital property, gifts of inventory do not permit the donor to choose an amount between the cost of the property and its fair market value. As a result, a gift of property that is part of the inventory of a business will result in an income inclusion. While there will be a corresponding eligible amount for the gift (the eligible amount will depend on whether any advantage is received by the donor), it is frequently less advantageous to donate inventory rather than capital property. This is one of the reasons why special rules were enacted for gifts of inventory made by artists, as discussed above.

Changes introduced in the March 19,

2007 budget permit corporations to claim a deduction for gifts of medicine held in inventory to a registered charity, if the charity has received financial assistance from CIDA and uses the medicine in carrying out its foreign activities. For gifts made on or after July 1, 2008, the medicine must have been available to be used by the charity at least six months prior to its expiration date and must qualify as a drug (within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act) which meets certain technical requirements. In addition, the charity must in the opinion of the Minister of International Cooperation meet certain conditions prescribed by regulation. This limits the situations in which corporations can claim tax relief for donations of medicine from inventory.

8. Gifts to the Crown

A gift to Her Majesty in right of Canada or Her Majesty in right of a Province (a “crown gift”) is subject to the same income limitation as other gifts, i.e. 75% of the donor’s income for the year plus 25% of any taxable capital gain, plus an amount equal to 25% of recapture of previously claimed capital cost allowance. Consequently, crown gifts provide the same tax relief as gifts to other charities. There are separate rules for gifts made prior to 1997 to the federal or provincial crown.

For this purpose, the crown will include an agent of the crown. In early 2008, the federal government amended the Museums Act to include the new Canadian Museum for Human Rights. Gifts to that museum and the other museums listed in that Act (including, for instance, the National Gallery of Canada, the Canadian Museum of Civilization and the Canadian Museum of Nature) will all be treated as gifts to the crown.

9. Charitable Donations of RRSPs, RRIFs and TFSAs

Donations made as a consequence of a direct designation of proceeds of RRSPs, RRIFs or TFSAs to a charity on the death of an individual qualify as gifts eligible for the individual donation tax credit, if the transfer of funds from RRSPs or RRIFs to the charity occurs within 36 months of death. The transfer is deemed to be a gift made immediately before death by the individual to the charity. The fair market value of the gift is deemed to be the fair market value, at the time of the individual’s death, of the right to the transfer. Since the balance in an RRSP or RRIF is treated as income in the year of death, in the absence of a rollover to a spouse, the credit for a gift to charity in the year of death will effectively eliminate the tax otherwise payable on the balance, if there is a direct designation. This is the same result as if there were a bequest by will of the amount included in income under the RRSP or RRIF, without having to determine the amount in advance. A direct designation of a charity will be treated as a donation. The same comments made above with respect to the valuation of a gift where there is a direct designation under a life insurance policy apply to direct designations of proceeds of RRSPs, RRIFs and TFSAs.

Anti-Terrorism Rules

Very broad rules in the ITA and other legislation give sweeping powers to the federal government to try to address abuses through which terrorism is funded through Canadian registered charities. Donors should be aware of these rules and carry out appropriate due diligence before making donations to organizations that may be subject to these rules. Similarly, charities should carefully consider the identity of donors, and the way in which donors have obtained funds and other donated property. Charities should review their lists of donors for organizations that may be identified as terrorist groups or affiliated with such groups or that might (even unknowingly) be assisting that type of activity. This can be of particular concern for organizations that are members of affiliated groups of charities, since one organization can be exposed for activities of another in certain circumstances. Both charities and donors would be well advised to consider these issues if there is any possibility of a terrorist connection.

CRA has issued a checklist to help charities and donors identify potential problems and assist charities in developing good management practices. In addition to the ITA, the Charities Registration (Security Information) Act (“CRSIA”) may be relevant. Under the CRSIA and the ITA, registration can be revoked if a charity makes its resources available, directly or indirectly, to a “listed entity” for purpose of the Criminal Code or an entity that engages in “terrorist activities” or activities that “support” terrorist activities. There are other prohibitions on funding or otherwise facilitating terrorism. More information can be obtained from the CRA website.

RECENT AND PROPOSED CHANGES

A number of changes are proposed for charities and charitable donations. These were last introduced in former Bill C-10, but are expected to be retroactive when reintroduced and eventually enacted. One significant change deals with “split receipting”, under which the value of a gift will be the excess of the value of the property given over the value of any benefit or advantage received by the donor or a person not dealing at arm’s length with the donor. As noted above, this is the basis for the new administrative position dealing with charitable annuities. CRA has indicated that this policy will also apply to situations in which a payment is made, for which some consideration is received from the charity, such as recognition, a small gift, membership, a meal, etc. The previous administrative practice of CRA was not supported by the law and CRA and the Department of Finance are attempting to rectify this. Under the proposals, a charity will be required to place a value on any benefit received by the donor in exchange for the payment, and issue a receipt only for the net amount. There will be some limits on the scope of this change, which will apply to gifts made after December 20, 2002.

The definition of “tax shelter” includes certain arrangements under which property is given by an individual to a charity if the tax credit claimed by an individual donor will exceed the cost of the property to the donor, or if limited-recourse debt is involved. This permits CRA to identify various tax planning techniques that have not been treated as tax shelters because the definition has not included situations in which there is a reduction in taxes payable through a tax credit, rather than a reduction in income or a reduction in taxable income.

The proposed amendments include significant changes in the rules for determining the value of a gift in kind. As a result of perceived abuses arising out of arrangements under which property was acquired at a low cost and valued at a much higher cost when donated, an arbitrary rule is proposed under which the value of the property will not exceed its cost, if the gift occurs within three years of acquisition of the property. This rule will apply regardless of the actual value of the property. In addition, if property is acquired with any expectation that it may be given during the lifetime of the owner, its value cannot exceed its cost. These rules will not apply to gifts of inventory, marketable securities, Canadian real estate, certified cultural property or approved ecological property or to gifts on death. As a result, all other gifts of capital property will be subject to these new valuation rules.

In determining the fair market value of the donated property, the intention of the donor at the time of acquisition will now be relevant. If one of the main reasons for acquiring the property was to make a gift (other than by will), in most cases the donor will have to use the acquisition cost as the fair market value at the time of the gift. For both gifts that are subject to the three year rule and gifts that are subject to the ten year rule, there will be extensive "tracing" rules to deal with transfers of property prior to the time of the gift.

These new rules will also apply to property that was acquired under what is called a "gifting arrangement" for tax shelter reporting purposes, or involving debt that the donor may not have to pay. An anti-avoidance rule will address situations in which a cash gift is made and the charity uses the cash to buy property from the donor at more than its cost. These new rules are very far reaching and unless they are changed before they are implemented, will have a very serious effect on a number of situations in which donors expect to receive credit for the value of the gift rather than its cost.

The proposals will reduce the value of the gift by any advantage that is in any way related to the gift. The scope of the wording is uncertain and it will be difficult to apply in many cases. CRA has indicated that it expects charities to undertake due diligence in establishing the fair market value based on the "cost" approach, and in determining the value of any advantage that would reduce the eligible amount of a gift.

If a donor fails to inform the registered charity of circumstances that reduce the eligible amount, despite the amount shown on the official receipts, under the proposals the eligible amount will be nil. This is a serious penalty for a donor who is prepared to gamble that an advantage will not reduce the eligible amount of the gift. Registered charities are advised to review carefully the circumstances in which gifts of property are received, when determining the eligible amount of the gift. In many cases, this will require consultations with the donor.

The proposals also deal with the rules for designation of a registered charity as a charitable organization, public foundation or private foundation and a new "control" test, based on commercial law concepts, such as arm's length and de facto control. These changes will apply after 1999. CRA has recently taken the position that the proposed rules will apply currently, without yet being enacted, because they will be retroactive.

Registered charities should include the CRA website address on official receipts, despite the fact that the new rules have not been yet enacted.

CRA can assess charities with intermediate sanctions. These give CRA the option of assessing tax or penalties rather than revoking registration, for various types of non-compliance, such as issuing improper receipts, carrying on an unrelated business (in the case of a charitable foundation or charitable organization) or carrying on any business (in the case of a private foundation), acquiring control of a corporation, conferring an undue benefit and other defaults. The rules for creating endowments, transfers between charities, and the disbursement quota require charities to plan carefully. The changes that followed the 2010 federal budget will affect this.

Anti-avoidance rules prevent "trafficking" in unused charitable donations made by corporations. In some cases, unused deductions for previous donations have been available to a subsequent purchaser of the shares of a corporation.

Form T3010B contains public information and also assists CRA in ensuring that charities comply with the requirements in the ITA. With the introduction of intermediate sanctions and the new rules for excess business holdings by private foundations, the revised form requires additional information that will assist CRA in determining whether penalties should be assessed. CRA has amended form T3010B to reflect the changes following the 2010 budget.

For taxation years beginning after March 19, 2007, a private foundation that owns more than 2% of any class of shares of a corporation is required to report its holdings together with those of persons not dealing at arm's length with it, when filing its T3010 return for the year. Where the holdings of a foundation exceed 2% and the combined holdings of the foundation and all non-arm's length persons exceed 20%, either the foundation or the other persons (or the group collectively) is required to divest to below the 20% level. If the divestiture does not occur within stipulated periods of time, the foundation will be subject to penalties. CRA can treat non-arm's length persons as dealing at arm's length, if sufficient reasons are given.

There are transitional rules for private foundations that held shares on March 19, 2007. The period for compliance will vary depending on the size of the holdings and will range from five to twenty years. The rules are designed to encourage private foundations to complete this transition in a timely manner by denying donors relief from capital gains on donations of marketable securities for taxation years of the private foundation beginning after March 19, 2012, if it is not then in compliance with the new rules.

These complex rules are apparently intended to address concerns about potential "self-dealing". Exemptions for "entrusted shares" (shares donated before March 19, 2007 on condition that the foundation retain them) exclude from the divestiture requirements certain unlisted shares held by the foundation on March 18, 2007. Although there is no divestiture requirement, these shares are taken into account in determining whether other shares of the same class are subject to the regime.

The exclusion applies to shares that meet the following criteria:

- (a) the share provides the foundation with an indirect interest in listed shares of another corporation;
- (b) the indirect interest is held through a controlled corporation (generally a corporation controlled by the foundation, a "relevant" person or a group of "relevant persons" with respect to the foundation);
- (c) if the foundation and those relevant persons had owned the listed shares directly, they would hold more than 20% of the listed shares of that corporation; and
- (d) the foundation, together with all controlled corporations, holds more than 2% of the listed shares of the listed corporation.

Extending the concept of excess holdings to shares of private corporations went further than had originally been expected and seems to be unrelated to the incentive for gifts of marketable securities. Despite the changes, these rules are still onerous and regarded by many observers as over-reacting and too broadly aimed.

There are also “look-through” rules for trusts in which a private foundation has an interest, if the trust owned the shares on March 18, 2007, rules dealing with “substituted” shares that are acquired in the course of certain tax-deferred corporate reorganizations and a remedy where a foundation owns entrusted shares which it cannot sell.

As announced in the March 4, 2010 federal budget, some basic concepts, such as “specified gift”, “capital gains pool” and “enduring property” dealing with the disbursement quota have been repealed for taxation years ending on or after March 4, 2010. The old rules have been replaced by a fairly simple requirement that a registered charity disburse at least 3.5% of the average value of its accumulated investment assets in the preceding two years on its own charitable activities or by making grants to qualified donees. Charitable organizations with less than $100,000 of such assets and charitable foundations with less than $25,000 of such assets are not subject to this requirement. This change eliminated the former “80/20” expenditure rule and other more complex provisions. There are new anti-avoidance rules dealing with the accumulation of capital and other compliance requirements for registered charities. Donors are no longer required to impose restrictions on gifts to permit registered charities to retain capital and spend only the income or a portion of the income. CRA has a great deal of discretion in administering some of the new rules. The underlying charity law and trust law concepts have not been changed and will require consideration in specific situations. Gifts made previously with restrictions that prevent the charity from spending the capital will still be restricted, despite the relief in the budget.

2011 FEDERAL BUDGET

The March 22, 2011 federal budget contained several proposals that would have been relevant to donors and qualified donees. Since the government was defeated, the proposals did not proceed; it is not clear if all or any of the proposals will eventually be implemented. The proposals are summarized below.

For flow-through shares acquired after the day of the budget, the non-recognition of capital gains on donations to qualified donees will no longer be available. This is the result of a complicated set of proposed rules designed to track pools of flow-through shares. As a result, capital gains will be realized and no double-dip will be available.

The donation credit or deduction will not be available to a taxpayer for granting an option to a qualified donee to acquire property from the taxpayer until the donee acquires property of the taxpayer covered by the option. Consistent with the proposals dealing with split receipting, a tax credit or donation will generally not be available to the taxpayer if the total amount paid by the qualified donee for property and for the option is greater than 80% of the fair market value of the property at the time the qualified donee acquires it.

New rules will apply where a qualified donee has received property from a donor and issued an official receipt but is subsequently required to return the donated property to the taxpayer. In some situations, this occurs after the limitation period has expired for reassessment of the year in which the donation was made. The proposal will permit reassessments to be made to disallow a claim for a credit or deduction where property is later returned by the qualified donee and for consequential adjustments to be made. Under the proposals, if property for which a taxpayer received an official receipt is later returned, the qualified donee must issue a revised receipt and send a copy of it to CRA if the amount of the receipt changes by more than $50.

New rules dealing with qualified donees will require CRA to identify in a publicly available list all qualified donees, including registered charities, RCAAAs, Canadian municipalities, certain municipal and public bodies performing a function of government in Canada, certain housing corporations, prescribed foreign universities and certain foreign organizations to which the federal crown has made a gift in the recent past. In addition, qualified donees will be subject to some of the compliance rules that now apply to registered charities. In particular, qualified donees will be required to maintain and make available proper books and records and issue proper receipts. Failure to do so could lead to suspension of receipting privileges, removal from the list of qualified donees or revocation of registration in the case of an RCAA.

RCAAAs will be required to have the promotion of amateur athletics in Canada as their exclusive purpose and function. Under current law, RCAAAs need only have this as their primary purpose and function. RCAAAs will also be subject to rules dealing with the conferral of undue benefits and carrying on an unrelated business, similar to the rules that apply to registered charities. CRA will be authorized to make available to the public certain information with respect to RCAAAs, in the same manner that now applies to registered charities.

CRA will be given discretion to refuse to register or revoke the registration of a charity or RCAA or to suspend its receipting privileges if a director or equivalent official is found to have been involved in certain inappropriate conduct. This generally would be the case if that person has been found guilty of a criminal offence in Canada (or outside Canada, if that offence, committed in Canada, would be a criminal offence) relating to financial dishonesty and has not received a pardon. It will also apply to directors or equivalent officials who had been involved in the operation of a charity or RCAA that was engaged in serious non-compliance for which its registration was revoked within the past five years or who were “promoters” of a “gifting arrangement” or other tax shelter in which a registered charity or RCAA participated, if the registration of the charity or RCAA was revoked within the past five years. These proposals will raise a number of issues that will be important to donors when reviewing the status of donees.

Other Qualified Donees

The Federal Budget announced on March 22, 2011 proposed significant changes to the regulatory regime that applies to qualified donees other than registered charities. Although the Budget fell with the defeat of the government, organizations affected by its provisions would be well advised to behave as if the budget changes will be coming back with an effective date of March 22, 2011 (or in the case of some measures, including those discussed in this article, January 1, 2012).

The Income Tax Act (the “Act”) provides that official donation receipts can be issued not only by registered charities, but also by other organizations that meet the definition of “qualified donee.” These include:

- registered Canadian amateur athletic associations (“RCAAs”);
- municipalities in Canada;
- municipal and public bodies performing a function of government in Canada (largely First Nations bands);
- housing corporations in Canada constituted exclusively to provide low-cost housing for the aged;
- prescribed universities outside Canada, the student body of which ordinarily includes students from Canada; and
- charitable organizations that have received a gift from the federal Crown in the current or preceding year.

Historically, registered charities have been subject to a stricter regulatory regime than other qualified donees. Under the proposed changes in the Budget, RCAAs will be made subject to many of the rules that apply to registered charities, as well as the associated penalties. The requirement to issue tax receipts in accordance with the Act, as well as to comply with the record keeping rules and with the CRA’s audit powers, will also be extended to all qualified donees, which will now face the possibility of having their qualified donee status revoked if they do not comply.

If the Budget changes are passed, these measures will apply on or after the later of January 1, 2012 and Royal Assent to the enacting legislation.

General Changes

The Budget proposed that all qualified donees will be required to be on a publicly available list maintained by the CRA. Currently, such a centralized list is maintained only for registered charities. The expansion of the list is designed to better enable members of the public to determine which organizations may issue official donations receipts, as well as to allow registered charities to know which organizations are qualified donees for grant-making purposes. This is a very helpful change.

With respect to the issuing of official donation receipts, the Budget proposed that if a qualified donee issues a donation receipt other than in accordance with the Act, the CRA may suspend the receipting privileges of that organization or revoke its qualified donee status. The Budget also proposed to extend the monetary penalties associated with the improper issuing of receipts to RCAAs. All qualified donees will therefore need to ensure that their receipting practices are compliant with the Act and regulations. We believe there are questions regarding whether the CRA has the constitutional jurisdiction to impose a fine on a municipality.

The Budget proposed to extend the requirements regarding books and records – which currently apply only to registered charities and RCAAs – to all qualified donees. All qualified donees will be required to maintain proper books and records and to provide access to those books and records to the CRA when requested pursuant to the CRA’s audit powers under the Act. If a qualified donee fails to comply, the CRA would be authorized to suspend the receipting privileges of the qualified donee or revoke its qualified donee status. The Budget also proposed to extend the monetary penalties associated with failing to file an information return (which currently apply only to registered charities) to RCAAs.

Qualified donees such as municipalities, prescribed foreign universities and foreign organizations that have received federal gifts should take careful note of these changes. If these Budget provisions are re-introduced and passed, the qualified donee status of these organizations could be revoked by the CRA for failure to comply with the above requirements. It is noteworthy in particular that the CRA will be empowered to revoke qualified donee status when a foreign organization does not comply with the CRA’s audit powers under the Act. Such powers have not been previously recognized under the Act, and organizations that would be subject to them will need to take steps to ensure compliance. It should be noted that the federal and provincial Crown, as well as the United Nations and its agencies, are not proposed to be subject to these new rules.

RCAAAAs

The Budget proposed several changes that apply specifically to RCAAAAs. The Budget noted that while registered charities are required to operate exclusively for charitable purposes, RCAAAAs currently need have only the promotion of amateur athletics in Canada on a nation-wide basis as their primary purpose and primary function. The Budget proposed that RCAAAAs be required to have the promotion of amateur athletics in Canada on a nation-wide basis as their exclusive purpose and exclusive function (rather than merely their primary purpose and primary function). The Budget document states that these changes will not prevent RCAAAAs from staging or engaging in international events and competitions, as such activities would normally be consistent with the promotion of amateur athletics in Canada, given the participation of Canadian teams and athletes in such events.

RCAAAAs will be made subject to the regulatory rules that apply to registered charities with regard to related business activities and political activities. RCAAAAs will be subject to the same penalties in respect of these activities as registered charities. RCAAAAs will also be subject to the penalties under the Act as registered charities in relation to the provision of undue benefits (e.g., excessive compensation to staff, fundraisers, etc).

The Budget proposed finally to provide public access to the annual information returns, governing documents, applications for registration and the names of directors of RCAAAAs. This information is currently available only for registered charities. The measure is intended to provide greater transparency for the public regarding how charities spend their funds.

The Budget noted that the CRA will consult with stakeholders regarding these changes and develop an administrative guidance regarding these measures. If these measures are re-introduced, it is hoped that this consultation process will be as well. In particular, stakeholders were invited to comment on the proposed “exclusivity of purpose and function test” for RCAAAAs.

Conclusion

If these particular Budget measures are re-introduced and passed, these changes will significantly change the regulatory landscape within which qualified donees, other than registered charities, operate. Such organizations, and RCAAAAs in particular, will need to ensure that their operations comply with the regulatory requirements that currently apply to registered charities. For many organizations, this will require a thorough review of current operations, receipting and record keeping practices.

Receipting Front and Centre in Budget

For anyone interested in the charity sector it was hard to miss the approximately 25 pages in the March 22, 2011 proposed Federal budget (the “Budget”) dealing with registered charities and certain entities other than registered charities that can issue official donation receipts, which are cumulatively referred to as “qualified donees” under the Income Tax Act. The Budget made it clear that the requirements that apply to registered charities in terms of receipting also apply to these qualified donees such as:

- registered Canadian amateur athletic associations (RCAAs);
- municipalities in Canada;
- municipal and public bodies performing a function of government in Canada;
- housing corporations in Canada constituted exclusively to provide low-cost housing for the aged;
- universities outside of Canada, the student body of which ordinarily includes students from Canada; and
- certain other charitable organizations outside of Canada that have received a gift from Her Majesty in right of Canada.

The proposals will not apply to certain qualified donees such as the Government of Canada, Canadian provincial and territorial governments, and the United Nations and its agencies.

The budget notes:

Official Donation Receipts

Registered charities must abide by rules that relate to the issuance of official donation receipts and are subject to sanctions if they fail to comply. These rules include the requirement to:

- issue receipts only for transactions that qualify as gifts;

- properly establish the fair market value of donated property; and
- ensure that receipts contain accurate and complete information.

Budget 2011 proposes that if a qualified donee issues a donation receipt other than in accordance with the Income Tax Act and its regulations, then the CRA be authorized to suspend the receipting privileges of the qualified donee or revoke its qualified donee status. Budget 2011 also proposes that the monetary penalties associated with improper issuance of receipts that apply to registered charities be extended to registered Canadian amateur athletic associations.

The most important benefit that Canadian registered charities and other qualified donees receive is the ability to issue “official donation receipts”, also sometimes referred to as donation receipts or tax receipts.

All qualified donees will now need to pay far closer attention to their receipting practices and abide by the rules for receipting as discussed or they will face revocation of their qualified donee status.

The ability to issue a tax receipt is almost akin to having a license to print money. If a donor makes a donation of $1 million and a charity issues a receipt for $1 million, the value of that receipt in Ontario for a taxpayer at the highest marginal tax rate is approximately $460,000. One tiny little piece of paper that only takes minutes to produce is worth $460,000.

It is important that qualified donees issue official donation receipts according to the rules set out in the Income Tax Act (Canada) and according to the guidance of the Charities Directorate of the Canada Revenue Agency (“CRA”). According to the CRA, when it audits Canadian registered charities approximately 89% of charities are issuing inappropriate receipts. Clearly, this is a very large proportion of charities and this is a problem that charities need to work on.

Mark Blumberg

There is a misconception among many charities that if a proper gift is made to the charity, then the charity is obliged to issue a tax receipt. This is not true. Charities are not obliged to issue tax receipts. Furthermore, charities may have administrative policies or guidelines setting out when they will issue tax receipts. For example, many charities do not issue tax receipts for donations under a certain amount, say $10 or $20. It is very important in terms of maintaining the confidence of charities in the public's mind that charities are upfront in explaining to donors what their policy is with respect to donations and the issuance of tax receipts. Therefore, if your charity will not issue official donation receipts for small donations, it should be clear about that. If for a particular event donation receipts will not be issued, it should advise as such.

Furthermore, if at an event a charity will be providing an advantage, such as a meal to the guests, in advertising the event it may wish to include a statement essentially warning donors that they will not be getting a full receipt for the amount that they are giving to the charity. If qualified donees cannot determine how to appropriately receipt then their mantra should be: “if in doubt don't receipt.”

PROFILE

Giving Birth As Bombs Fall

History is not kind to the humble. Stories celebrating selfless acts of bravery and compassion are often never told because the heroes shy away from praise and attention. My mother, Halina Pisarski, was one of these special people.

Her story begins in May 1940, three days after Germany invaded Belgium. My father was off fighting for the British forces. Nine months pregnant and with 8- and 10-year old sons in tow, she boarded a train hoping to reach the relative safety of France. It took three days for that train to cover 75 kilometres. During the trek there was nothing to eat or drink. What little food she had brought along was quickly exhausted. Things seemed impossibly desperate, then she went into labour. The train stopped and she found herself stranded somewhere in southern Belgium, near the city of Tournai. How she protected her children from repeated attacks by low-flying aircraft strafing the train with bombs and machine-gun fire is a story in itself.

Now in full labour, she managed to get to a makeshift hospital where she met a young student nurse who helped deliver the baby. And there, in the middle of a war zone, I was born.

My brothers were told to wait outside. In all the confusion, a team of Red Cross workers collecting orphaned or stranded children picked them up and put them in their vehicle. An hour after I was delivered, the bombing became so intense that the building was evacuated. Clothed in only a short hospital gown and wrapped in a sheet, holding her one-hour-old infant close to her, my mother was put in an ambulance with severely wounded soldiers. The ambulance never had a chance to leave. An explosion ripped off the roof of the vehicle and killed the driver. My mother somehow got out. She grabbed a coat from a dead soldier and rummaged around other dead bodies for handkerchiefs and anything else useful for herself and her newborn.

She was frantic over her missing sons but with no idea where to look and night falling, she took refuge in a barn with several other stranded women. One was a 17-year-old girl who had also just given birth but was unable to breastfeed. Another was a nurse who was caring for a baby whose mother died during childbirth. She too had no milk to feed the infant, so my mother fed all three newborns, one after the other. At night, the women had to stay awake to chase away rats. My mother remained in that barn for a few days in order to regain her strength. She begged at a nearby German army encampment for food for her as well as the other women.

My mother eventually took to the road and started looking for my brothers. She walked from orphanage to orphanage, asking every person she met if they knew where displaced children might have been taken. During the day, when one diaper was soiled, she would rinse it in a puddle of water and hang it on her back to dry. At one point, she took shelter for the night in the entrance of a chapel only to find out in the morning that there had been a sign outside the gated grounds with the warning: "Beware: Mine Field."

And on she walked on. Another night, she came upon a large deserted house. She found her way to one of the bedrooms and collapsed on a bed, completely exhausted from carrying her baby all day under a hot May sun. She had barely fallen asleep when a German soldier arrived and warned her that the house had been requisitioned as a hospital for German soldiers. However, he took pity on us and told her she could spend the night. He even brought her some hot soup to eat. She finally found my brothers at a nunnery and returned home to Brussels.

At this point, I should mention that my mother was Polish, and that she had dark brown eyes and black hair. Even though she had attended university, the only work she could get was cleaning houses. It was wartime and people were wary of foreigners. She was constantly on her guard on her way to and from work because the Gestapo would frequently pick up anyone who looked remotely Jewish.

In 1943, even though I was barely three, I remember the Gestapo coming to our apartment building to take away the Jewish family who lived downstairs. By a stroke of good fortune, the youngest daughter was not at home that evening. A few days later, my mother was approached and asked to take the little girl to Antwerp where a family would hide the child. My mother accepted the mission without hesitation.

I vividly remember how she recounted that story to me. There was a German officer seated on the train across from my mother and the little girl. He kept glancing back and forth between her and the girl. While he was staring, all she could think about was her three-year-old daughter and her now 11- and 13-year-old boys home alone. They had been strictly instructed not to leave the apartment. She battled slipping into panic. What would happen to them if anything happened to her?

Causes and Charities

Make Sure Your Wishes Are Carried Out

Making a charitable bequest can be as simple as naming a charity in your will. You go to your lawyer, make sure you have the correct legal name of the charity, and then decide if the gift should be a legacy (a specific amount) or residual (percentage). There are, however, times when more planning is required to achieve your goal.

One of the distinctions we like to make with donors who wish to support charities as part of their estate plan is the difference between cause and charities. A cause is something that may be shared by a number of organizations, while a charity is a particular entity. While the world may change over time, it is likely that certain causes will endure in importance. A charity, by contrast, is an organization that addresses a cause and may be more time limited.

This discussion particularly arises when donors have a number of charities – especially small charities – that they want to support in their estate plans. The challenge with a bequest is that it is often high value and does not get paid out until some unknown date in the future. If the charity is large and well-established – such as a university or national health organization – it is likely to be there to receive the bequest and use it as intended. If the charity is smaller, shrinking or young, its future is less clear. When a donor has charities that fall into this category, it is wise to look at the cause the donor is trying to benefit, not specific entities.

When retirees Donna and Frank recently updated their will, they identified a number of charities they wished to support after they are gone.

The challenge is figuring out how much would go to each charity and how could their gift be protected if one of the charities should fail. For example, their church was losing its congregation and may be closed. The animal rescue charity that they had been supporting recently had a battle between the founder and a new board, and its future is in question. And there were a number of new small environmental charities working in the area of their cottage, but they were not sure they would all survive.

Another important consideration for Donna and Frank is their legacy. They don't have children and it is important to them to have something left in the world that reflects their lives, values and commitments.

When they went through the estate planning process, they decided to establish a family legacy fund at Aqueduct Foundation, to be known as The Donna and Frank Foundation.

Aqueduct Foundation is a public registered charity founded and operated by Scotia Private Client Group that enables donors to establish their own family foundations, which are technically known as donor advised funds. Each fund is named after the donor, a family, or a loved one, and has its own mandate.

A legacy fund is a trust that can support either causes or individual charities on an ongoing basis. It provides assets protection if a charity beneficiary fails, professional investment management, and checks-and-balances to ensure charitable beneficiaries are accountable. Through careful due diligence in the granting process, Aqueduct Foundation will make sure that Donna and Frank's wishes are carried out regardless of charities that may exist in the future.

For Donna and Frank, using Aqueduct Foundation to structure their charitable giving in their estate plan is partly practical and partly personal.

On the practical side, Aqueduct made their will planning easy and flexible. Now they have a will with only one charity named, but they can easily change the causes they wish to support without changing the will. Each year, after their deaths, their foundation will provide annual support for their causes. If their church or the animal rescue centre is closed in the future, their gift is protected and they have provided instructions for alternative beneficiaries. Also, they have left instruction for their niece to be involved to choose the environmental charity working near their cottage.

Lauren Storer

Donna and Frank also wanted to make sure that their foundation could make exceptional gifts, above and beyond the annual income, if their charities had a well-documented need. This is known as a grant of capital, and Aqueduct Foundation is one of the rare foundations to enable it. For example, if their church continues to serve their community, it could have major capital expenses, such as a roof repair. Donna and Frank wanted to leave instructions that could address special needs of this nature.

Another practical benefit is the ability to donate funds during life in a private and tax-effective way. Frank owns highly-appreciated bank stock that he plans to give to their foundation in during their lifetimes. When it comes time to make the donation, he will receive a tax credit of up to 46% and not pay any capital gain on the disposition. In effect, they are making a down payment on their legacy. They may also donate a 20-year-old life insurance policy to their foundation, which will provide additional tax savings during life.

The emotional aspect of their foundation is something private and personal. These are funds that would have gone to children, if they had had any. When Donna and Frank established their legacy fund they assisted in the preparation of their biographies to ensure their wishes and lives were understood. Their foundation is a permanent living memorial that will provide ongoing support to the causes they care about. It's a true legacy – their values live on to help others.

Charitable Planning Options

Concise Summaries Available

Charitable giving is a growing priority for many Canadians. With smaller families than past generations, opportunities increase to consider current and future community needs by including important charities in financial and estate plans.

Planning your gift can take advantage of charitable tax incentives and it can be done to coincide with tax events from the disposition of assets, lifetime events, and your overall financial and estate plan.

Working with your team of advisors, you may consider a number of approaches to achieve your philanthropic vision.

Scotia Private Client Group has produced a series of concise brochures to explain the key features of some of the more important charitable gift planning options. Below is a thumbnail sketch of the content of some of these brochures. You may access the full brochures by going to this page in the Digital Edition of the Canadian Donor's Guide at www.donorsguide.ca and clicking on the appropriate link.

Charitable Bequests

A gift in your will is the most common future funded charitable gift plan. Easy to establish during your estate planning process, you may name one or more charities as a specific, contingent, or residual beneficiary with an appropriate clause in your will. The use of codicils provides you some flexibility to make amendments to your will should your charitable objectives change before you are ready to draft a new will. <http://www.donorsguide.ca/Bequests.htm>

Gifts of RRSP/RRIFs

Canadians have an estimated $1.1 trillion invested in registered savings and income plans. Yet these are among the highest taxed assets at death when the plan is de-registered with its full value taken in as income. Naming charities as beneficiaries is a simple way to efficiently pass this asset to charities of your choice, while reducing your estate administration costs and protecting your charitable intentions from potential challenges. <http://www.donorsguide.ca/RRSP/RRIFs.htm>

Gifts of Public Securities

The 2006 Federal Budget eliminated capital gains taxes when gifts of public securities are donated to charities. This provision makes donating stocks, bonds, income trust units, mutual fund units, flow-through shares, and employee stock options very attractive options for donors considering both gifts during their life time and through their estate plans. There are three brochures on this topic.

- Tax-Effective Donations of Public Securities – <http://www.donorsguide.ca/Securities.htm>
- Employee stock options – <http://www.donorsguide.ca/Options.htm>
- Exchangeable Shares – <http://www.donorsguide.ca/Exchangeable.htm>

Gifts of Life Insurance

Life insurance is one of the most flexible planning tools to provide income and asset protection for our loved ones. It can also provide significant planning opportunities when incorporated into our charitable giving plans. A gift of life insurance can leverage your charitable dollars to maximize the ultimate benefit to your charities. There are two brochures on this topic.

Charitable Gift Annuities

Given recent investment market volatility, life annuities are increasingly popular ways to provide tax-efficient income guaranteed for life. The Charitable Gift Annuity combines the “life income” of the annuity with a charitable gift supporting your favourite charity. – <http://www.donorsguide.ca/GiftAnnuities.htm>

Charitable Insured Annuities

A charitable insurance annuity builds on the insured annuity plan which provides a stream of tax efficient income for personal expenses and a second stream of income to pay life insurance premiums for a future payout of death benefits for your estate. By naming a charity as owner and beneficiary of the life insurance policy, you enjoy additional tax savings during your life time while securing a significant future charitable gift with the death benefits. – <http://www.donorsguide.ca/InsuredAnnuities.htm>

Private Foundations

Establishing a Private Foundation, often referred to as a Family Foundation, is a meaningful way for some Canadians to structure their philanthropy. Along with consideration of charitable purposes, the appointment of trustees or directors, and managing the investment and administrative duties, appropriate consideration needs to be given to the timing and type of assets contributed at inception or in the future to the private foundation. Excess Business Holdings rules are one such consideration. – <http://www.donorsguide.ca/PrivateFoundations.htm>

Retired OPP Sergeant Finds Second Career as Red Cross Volunteer

Ted Giannini

Ted Giannini feels honoured to help people overcome disaster

It's been said that the last place in the world you'd want to be is the first place you'll find the Red Cross.

Ted Giannini is one of those remarkable Red Cross volunteers who rushes to the scene of terrible disasters. Making use of his past experience and emergency training, Ted has taken leadership roles in Red Cross disaster relief efforts for the last 12 years, wearing his compassion on his sleeve.

Helping people overcome personal tragedy comes second nature to Ted, aged 72. After retiring from a fulfilling career with the Ontario Provincial Police, in 1999 Ted saw an ad placed by Red Cross in his local Sudbury newspaper, looking for Disaster Management volunteers.

"I always worked on the front line, so this was right up my alley," says Ted. "I could lend a lot of experience and skills, including the capacity to take on a leadership role, listen to people, be patient, and treat everyone equally."

Ted had already come to respect the Red Cross's ability to mobilize the power of humanity to help the most vulnerable, since his wife and a good friend were both long-time Red Cross Transportation Service drivers.

All this made Ted's decision easy. "I knew I couldn't spend my retirement sitting in a mall drinking coffee. I needed to keep active and healthy. So I've thrown myself into this volunteer role; it's my new full-time job. I work out of my Red Cross branch every day," says Ted.

Ted's certainly been busy. In his own region, he's helped to calm the frazzled nerves of families suddenly burned out of their homes. On two occasions, he organized shelter for residents of the Kashechewan reserve when flooding forced them to evacuate their homes for months. He was also deployed to help those who lives were left in tatters by Hurricanes Ivan and Katrina, and the BC floods.

Now being regarded as a true Red Cross disaster management expert, Ted also serves on Red Cross advisory groups at all levels: the Sudbury Branch Council, Northern Ontario Regional Council, Ontario's Disaster Management Advisory Committee, and the International Advisory Committee.

"Two things keep me doing this work," says Ted. "First, it's great fun being part of this team of dedicated volunteers and staff. Being from so many different walks of life, I learn from them and enjoy their company.

"But what really keeps me motivated is that look of relief I see on people's faces when they know the Red Cross is going to look after them. And my heart is touched by simple moments like when a native elder, with tears in his eyes, approached me to offer me his thanks for my help."

In October, the province gave Ted the Ontario Senior Achievement Award for Community Service/Voluntarism. "I feel honoured that the Red Cross allows me to be of service in this way. People helping people – there's nothing better. But my work is really a team effort – nobody can do it alone."

There will always be situations where the Red Cross is needed, but it can only be there with charitable support. The Red Cross cannot stop famines or floods, but as long as there are individuals such as Ted Giannini who are prepared to help, its humanitarian spirit can endure. One individual can make a difference.

Legacy Gifts A Lasting Relationship

If I was making a legacy gift, I would search out a local charity whose work I admired and was well respected by others working in the community, and I would give them an endowment, the principle and interest to be spent over a number of years as the organization saw fit. I would stipulate they use the gift to ensure relationship-based programs had continuity over many years, so they would be there, in their community, available to those who needed them.

A million dollars to a university or hospital will buy part of a research chair or new MRI machine. A million dollars to a community organization will fundamentally alter its reality and the lives of those it serves. It would mean the organization could provide the continuity that so many programs lack. They could fill the gaps and lags in funding as they lurch from short-term grant to short-term grant and, with that stability, could invest in staff, and those staff in turn could invest in building relationships with those they serve.

A number of years ago I was studying the organization of youth programs. My inquiries took me across Canada meeting with youth and youth groups. In the course of this work I spoke with many youth who had been very troubled and who had overcome their difficulties to make something of themselves as young adults.

I began asking them to reflect on why they had made it. To my surprise they all told me variations on the same story. They all described a person who had entered their lives, believed in them when they did not believe in themselves, and who maintained a relationship with them. One young woman described a youth worker in a group home who absolutely refused to give up on her, who refused to put her back on the street when she broke every rule, and who insisted she was both skilled and valuable. Gradually, she said, she came to believe in herself, and when I spoke with her, she was a self-assured young adult successfully finding her way.

We sometimes get so caught up with the big picture, with wanting to make the big fix, that we miss the obvious and the most valuable investments. This directory is full of articles on the recent policy push for double bottom line returns – a profit and a social return. As an investor you can have it all, or so the current discussions would have us believe.

Don't misunderstand me. There is a need for capital investment to assist in addressing our social issues, and, there are likely a number of social issues that can be addressed through investments, particularly capital-intensive projects, or in sectors where technology can make a difference. But investments demand a financial return; they are not gifts freely given and should never be confused as such. Investments require a financial return so in the end it is the financial return, not the social agenda, which drives the final decisions. Gifts, on the other hand, are satisfied with a social return, or sometimes with no obvious return at all.

It is important to remember that not everything worth doing can be quantified. Think of your own family. If you quantified the raising of children you would never have attempted it. The metrics are poor, and the financial return (if there ever is one) is years away, but as we all know, the nonmonetary rewards are huge. It is relationships that endure, that we value, that sustain us. Many working the front lines of charities in local communities are building relationships with the next generation: stressed parents, overwhelmed newcomers, or those among us with disabilities.

Charities are not talking about it because relationships do not meet current impact criteria, they are hard to measure, and their influence is often subtle or is not visible until years later. But in every community local charities are building relationships, building trust, and helping people believe in themselves. They are doing this despite all the roadblocks put in their way: short-term unstable grants, funder demands for immediate visible concrete outcomes, and now the pressure to turn many programs into social enterprises. Charities manage all these demands because in addition, as a by-product, they can build the relationships that transform lives.

Lynn Eakin
Lynn Eakin and Associates

Ask any charity what would make them more effective and it will reply: consistent long term funding over time with the flexibility to deploy the funds as needed. If you ask a funder or impact investor their criteria of a successful grant or investment they will reply: rigorous program design, firm outcomes and time-limited financing. The disconnect between what charities need and what funders and investors want is vast.

My money is with the charities. Once one of my staff came into my office and showed me a letter she had received. It was from a former client, one whom we had been very upset about because we felt we had failed her. She had been arrested for beating up two policemen even though she was a petite but obviously tough young woman. We thought we had not reached her, and certainly by any funder criteria she was not a successful outcome.

It was several year later and she was in hospital with a leg in traction (or we might never have received the letter) and she wrote to tell her worker how much she had valued her relationship with her, and to say she had finally understood what she had been trying to tell her – that she could take control of her life. She had decided that she could do it and had gone back to school and was working part-time. She was writing to thank her.

Corny and old fashioned? Maybe, but for my money, giving your local community charity a no-strings, long-term, flexible donation is priceless, and for everything else there is impact investing.

Charities Are Our MacGyvers

Fans of the 1980s TV show MacGyver will recall that the show was essentially based on its star defusing bombs and escaping from bad guys using whatever meagre items were close at hand. And in this way at least, charities resemble MacGyver – always tasked with the impossible given only scant resources. That this is true is obvious to everyone in the sector and is supported by surveys indicating both great need and falling donations. As a society, we must either decrease the expectations placed on charities or otherwise find ways to increase their funding.

Generally speaking there are only two ways in which charities raise funds. The first is the traditional solicitation of donations from the public and the second is through the sale of goods or services to the public. Both of these areas are highly regulated, but while the sector has developed some level of sophistication in the solicitation of donations, its ability to adapt market tools for its own purposes has been deliberately stymied.

Of course, there are policy reasons for this situation. Charities, given that they are non taxable, would theoretically have an unfair advantage in the marketplace against for profit entities, and so the type and scope of charities' market participation is effectively limited to 'related businesses'. This regime basically restricts charities to businesses in which the business activity is both related to the charity's objects and ancillary to the charity's activities. (Volunteer run businesses are completely excluded from the related business rules). It bears special emphasis that the related business rules are defined by administrative fiat and not by the law. The actual statutory language and even the cases in this area are very sparse and provide precious little direction for charities – as a result the CRA has been left to define the parameters of participation by charities in the market.

The restrictiveness of the CRA guidelines and the paucity of sophisticated tools allowing charities to raise funds contrasts with the myriad of financial tools available to for profit entities in need of capital. Everything from interest bearing accounts and credit cards to hedge funds and derivatives was designed to help people with capital meet and transact business with people who need capital. Fundamentally, these transactions are based on the presumption that those with capital will only part with it if properly compensated, giving due regard to the risk involved by giving money to the other party. But, just as people are motivated by greed, people are also motivated by altruism. Market tools developed to exploit greed can also be used to serve altruistic goals.

Over the years the efficacy of using various market tools as a way to deliver additional capital to charities such as a charity bank, social bonds and a charity stock market have been discussed and in some cases tested. In England for example, both a charity bank and social bonds are used to various degrees. These concepts all recognize that private sector market tools are useful in bringing together those with capital and those in need of it. They also assume that altruism, either by itself or as a way to mitigate greed, can motivate people to engage in business dealings with charities.

The private sector has been extremely innovative in developing the tools it needs to deliver scarce resources to where they are most needed. These tools should be adapted to the charity sector so that charities can have the funding necessary to develop new ways of achieving their charitable objects. Moreover, this would help investors looking for social returns on investment best direct their funds. And in general, Canadians will benefit if our accumulated knowledge in the development of capital markets and the immense wealth it has created is applied to help charities meet the needs of our society.

Fortunately, some small steps have been taken to break down the barriers that exist in using financial tools in the charity sector. The most prominent amongst these is the report by the Canadian Task Force on Social Finance's December 2010 report entitled Mobilizing Private Capital for Public Good. The report's recommendations are discussed elsewhere in this year's Donor's Guide and deserve serious consideration by policy makers. Unfortunately, these proposals are undermined by the disconnect between the Provincial jurisdiction to regulate charities and the current regulation of the sector by the Federal government through its income tax power. The solution to this fundamental problem though is mirrored in the suggestions in the report itself. Just as the report suggests the financial and charitable sectors need to learn from each other, so too do the Provincial and Federal governments need to work together for the benefit of all Canadians.

Reflections on Starlings, Collaboratives, and the Nature of the Nonprofit Sector

Marilyn Struthers

The voluntary nonprofit sector is a collection of highly varied organizations that create a landscape of care across Canada. Most often the sector is understood through the nature of its components or through its relations to government rather than through the complexity of the whole. In this article, I speculate about how we can re-conceptualize the sector, which is, of course, no longer either predominantly voluntary or entirely nonprofit and is most certainly in changing relations with governments. Using the long view of my own history and the broad view across the sector gained from my daily work at the Ontario Trillium Foundation, I reflect on what the sector is and how it is evolving highly collaborative structures, two or more organizations working together to achieve a common goal, which are producing change at warp speeds. Drawing from the compelling ideas and natural world models of complexity science, I offer reflection on my own journey of discovery into the nature of the sector.

Forty years is a long time, I am realizing, to have been working in the nonprofit sector; more than half of its history in Canada, if you count its genesis from the 1943 March Report. This was the document that first proposed the welfare state as a partnership between government and civil society as Canadians set out to address the legacy of insecurity and deprivation created by two world wars and the Great Depression (Elson, 2007). Its history is twice as long if you date the sector from the first charities built prior to the turn of the century on old world models of wealth and church-related organizations in England and France.

I was trained in the early 1970s in community development and have worked since then in various small nonprofit organizations, building mental health services where there were none, organizing visual and lively arts in rural Ontario, developing the public storyline of violence in families and services for women, raising awareness of children with learning disabilities in Ontario schools, and facilitating for First Nations as they developed conversations about rights entitlement and self-determination. I have run organizations, sat on boards, worked as a researcher, facilitator, and writer for hire – doing all the things that are the stock and trade of community organizing.

If forty years provides the “long view” from which to consider the extraordinary and rapid pace of change that is occurring in the sector now, it is the “broad view” out across the sector gained from my current job in the provincial program of the Ontario Trillium Foundation that has turned me into an inveterate sector watcher. A decade ago, I went “inside” to work as a funder where I review and recommend investment from among some $40M dollars a year worth of new project ideas and innovation in the human services sector. Understanding trends in sector organizing is something I work at daily in order to effectively coach provincial and national organizations to situate their work in a shifting landscape. Sometimes it is like watching weather come across big water; small ripples and eddies portend a sea change to come.

This quest for re-description began several years ago when I took eighteen months away from my work at the Foundation to join the federal Task Force on Community Investments (TFCI). I had been hoping to apply the broad view of shift and change to the micro-detail of improved federal funding practice (TFCI, 2006). Developing recommendations involved facilitating focus groups in departments that provide Grants and Contributions programs (Gs&Cs) to sector organizations. Yet, in the course of the work, I found myself struggling constantly to provide alternatives to outdated language and metaphors and to describe the vibrant realities that I know of the sector through my work. It was as if many of the bureaucrats I worked with did not “see” the sector as a coherent system as I do, but as a collection of disparate not-quite-business-like organizations. Seldom at a loss for words, I found the experience jarring. Sometimes I undertook explanation using my own stories. Yet as I spoke of the very different organizations I have worked with, I realized that it is only recently, and in retrospect, that I have begun to understand even the range of my own work as a career path in the nonprofit sector. I have become curious about this relative inability to evoke the collectivity of the sector, a kind of invisibility that doesn't seem to afflict either the business or the public sector. Without an understanding of the whole, its purpose and ways of working, the parts are just parts, loose on the landscape.

Inside, we have seldom had the capacity to articulate the role and the nature of the sector as the rich tapestry of change and ethos of care that is how I believe that most would see our work. Long definitional discussions have yielded expressions of frustration, compared to “pinning Jello to a wall.” Without ever really achieving resolution, earlier definitional debates of the sector over voluntary, not-for-profit, and community-based descriptors have more recently given way to new definitional discussion. The focus now is on social enterprise, enterprising nonprofits, and mission-driven for-profits, and the distinctions between them, as the face of the sector changes and new forms of organization develop in the “hybrid space” between the civil society and the commercial market.

What is constant is the notion of change. Perhaps the sector does not stay the same for long enough to build a definition based on organizational description, and our reconceptualization must fasten rather on notions of change and impermanence. While federal government discussions on red tape continue to grind on without dramatic impact on investment practice (Philips 2010), sector conversations appear to be moving away from discussion of reliance on, or even hope for, improved or increased government funding. Many have simply withdrawn from the discussion, moving instead to learning about new highly collaborative models of operation and more entrepreneurial ways of thinking about and generating revenue.

I first started watching this shift in the last recession, as a new funder, in the newly re-constituted Ontario Trillium Foundation in 1999. I was gripped by the angst of sector workers (some former colleagues on the grant-writing side of the desk) in the midst of what was then termed a funding crisis (Scott & Pike, 2005). I began then to speculate on the “sea change” in public funding that was shifting investment to project-based outcome rather than core funding relationships – funding organizations to “do” rather than to “be” – and to tell the stories of the new styles of organizations that were emerging. This work on “financial vibrancy” (Struthers, 2005) drew from a set of Voluntary Sector Initiative (VSI) case studies on organizational finance to describe six capacities that were shared by organizations that were doing well financially – the outliers in the funding crisis. These capacities included financial literacy, sustainability modeling, nurturing participation, meaningful planning, communication, and the capacity to build relationships. I found myself describing highly fluid and relational organizations with strong abilities to forge collaborative work. So “porous” were the structures of some of these organizations that they could alter shape and form to adapt to the changing requirements of new projects and partnerships to get their work done.

These organizations most often had a narrow laser-beam focus on mission, were focused on change, and used their relationships consciously, leveraging the knowledge of constituents and the capacities of partner organizations to create the ability to change course and form and reform quickly and in a highly opportunistic manner. What I can see now that I couldn’t when I first wrote the material is that only two of the capacities of financially vibrant organizations are about getting and managing money. The other four are the capacities that build and hold collaborative relationships in the work.

I remember well the cold winter day in my living room surrounded by the piles of colour-coded text that resulted from the qualitative analysis of some 60 case studies. With dismay I realized that the capacities these organizations related to their financial wellbeing were nothing like what was being described in the capacity building literature on effective organizations. This literature described strong mission, vision, and strategy that yielded strong program and internal management. I came to realize that these functions are grounded in a value of stability drawn from organizational development literature written in more predictable times (Connolly & Lukas). It was with some relief that I found that Lester Salaman had similar findings in a 2003 study that suggested that American nonprofits too were in pursuit of partnerships and collaboration as a response to fiscal stress (Sussman, 2003).

Stability is, of course, not an effective goal at a time when the sector is repositioning itself in the wake of rapidly changing political and economic environments. The capacities that lead to resilience, the ability to be opportunistic and to manage and leverage a broad range of potential partnerships, are much more valuable when unpredictable change and short foresight horizons are the norm. These organizations were doing well because they had begun to build organizational forms that could change as fast as the social change work they were committed to. They had done this by connecting with others with similar interest. Where there is relevance in the work, resources follow.

When she arrived in Antwerp, the arrangement called for my mother to sit on a bench with the girl. A woman would come, sit on the other side of the child and my mother would leave. However, my mother was so traumatized by the ride on the train that her legs were frozen in place and incapable of supporting her. Finally as darkness came, she found the strength to get up and board the train back to Brussels.

These were not her only heroic deeds. She sent parcels to that Jewish family in the German work camp even though she barely earned enough to feed herself and her children. I still have the postcards they sent her asking for food and clothing. I remember how she told me that she had had to work one full day to purchase one egg for me! For three long years after I was born, she pumped her breasts every single day and took the excess milk to the Red Cross to feed preemies and newborns whose mothers had died or couldn’t produce breast milk and who could not properly digest cow’s milk. She was given a booklet where they tracked the number of litres of milk she donated! I still have that precious document in my possession. She only stopped when her teeth literally started to disintegrate from lack of calcium. Any cow’s milk she worked so hard to purchase was for us children; she never drank a drop.

There are only two of us left now, a younger brother and I. Who will remember my mother when we are gone? I do not want her name to pass into oblivion after I am no longer here to cherish and honour her memory and her contributions. I decided to contact Plan Canada, an international development and relief organization, I have long been supporting. They set up an Endowment Fund in my mother’s name to keep her memory alive. It is designed so that all the proceeds go toward Plan’s work to help children affected by war. I know my mother would be proud of helping children in conflict zones even after her passing. Through this fund, the legacy of her courage and goodness will live on.

I had the privilege of calling this great woman “Maman.” To others, she was simply Halina Pisarski.

Jenny Hetherington has travelled extensively and had many adventures in many regions of the world. Jenny, with pride and gratitude, has embraced Canada as the only nationality she has ever held. Jenny has been a contributor to Plan Canada since 1979.

NOTE 1:

La majorité des organismes sont classés par leur activité principale. Certains organismes apparaissent dans plus d'une catégorie lorsque leurs activités sont de nature très différentes.

Pour plus d'informations sur les activités d'un organisme, se reporter à « But » dans la liste principale.

NOTE 2:

Plusieurs organismes avec un numéro d'enregistrement de charité à Revenu Canada ne collectent pas de fonds de façon active ou sont supportés principalement par leurs membres respectifs.

La liste suivante présente les types d'organismes qui n'apparaissent que très peu dans le guide:

- Départements et agences gouvernementaux
- Ecoles publiques et leurs conseils d'administration
- Associations professionnelles et industrielles
- Clubs de services communautaires

De plus, comme il y a plusieurs organismes locaux, régionaux et nationaux connexes et/ou qui sont intéressés par le même travail, les organismes locaux ne sont généralement pas inclus dans le guide. Nous vous suggérons de contacter le bureau régional ou national de l'organisme désiré afin de trouver un groupe local particulier.

Amnesty International

is a worldwide, voluntary movement that works impartially to promote and protect the fundamental human rights of all people. These universal values include freedom of expression and belief and the right not to be subjected to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment.

Amnesty International depends on the support of individuals, not governments, to carry out its lifesaving work. Your contribution enables Amnesty to continue its crucial research and campaigning on behalf of the victims of human rights violations around the world.

Winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, Amnesty International promotes public awareness and understanding of the full range of human rights as set out in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Nearly three million people in 150 countries are Amnesty supporters.

Les Amputés de guerre De génération en génération

Depuis le jour où l'Association des Amputés de guerre a été fondée, en 1918, elle se caractérise par sa philosophie « les amputés s'entraident ».

L'Association des Amputés de guerre continue de subvenir aux besoins des amputés de guerre qu'elle compte parmi ses adhérents et elle gère divers programmes, notamment LES VAINQUEURS, un programme à l'intention des enfants amputés. Ce dernier offre aux jeunes amputés, de partout au pays, de l'aide financière pour l'achat de membres artificiels, des séminaires régionaux, du soutien entre pairs, des ressources et bien d'autres choses encore.

Grâce à son Programme LES VAINQUEURS, l'association poursuit sa tradition :
« les amputés s'entraident ».

On peut obtenir des renseignements sur la façon de procéder pour faire un legs à l'Association des Amputés de guerre en communiquant avec :

But: L'Association des Amputés de guerre subvient aux besoins des anciens combattants amputés et gère divers programmes, notamment LES VAINQUEURS, un programme pour les enfants amputés. Ce dernier leur offre de l'aide financière pour l'achat de membres artificiels, des séminaires régionaux, du soutien entre pairs, des ressources et bien d'autres choses encore. L'Association des Amputés de guerre ne reçoit aucune subvention gouvernementale. Sa seule source de financement provient de l'appui du public à son Service des plaques porte-clés et des étiquettes-adresse. Grâce à son Programme LES VAINQUEURS, l'association poursuit sa tradition : "les amputés s'entraident".

Responsable: Marlène Girard, directrice générale

Your donation or bequest to the Animal Welfare Foundation of Canada goes farther. We fund direct services and programs for animals in need, and innovative educational and research programs that help animals at the community, provincial and national levels.

AWFC grants and programs are administered by an all volunteer Board of Trustees, composed of veterinarians, animal welfare scientists and other professionals who have broad experience of animal protection in Canada and in the evaluation of grant requests and project outcomes.

Whether you want to help companion, farm, wild or exotic animals, your gift to the AWFC will have many returns. For the animals, and for you.

Les dons ou legs que vous faites à la Fondation du bien-être animal du Canada (FBAC) ont une incidence étendue. En effet, grâce à eux, nous finançons des services et des programmes destinés directement aux animaux dans le besoin ainsi que des programmes de sensibilisation et de recherche novateurs qui aident les animaux à l'échelle communautaire, provinciale et nationale.

Les subventions et programmes de la FBAC sont administrés par un Conseil d'administration formé entièrement de bénévoles comptant des vétérinaires, des scientifiques spécialistes du bien-être animal et d'autres professionnels qui ont une grande expérience de la protection des animaux au Canada ainsi que de l'évaluation de demandes de subventions et de résultats de projets.

Que vous souhaitiez aider des animaux de compagnie, de ferme, sauvages ou exotiques, le don que vous ferez à la FBAC suscitera de nombreux avantages...pour les animaux et pour vous.

Leave your mark on Science

Liz spends everyday in pain. She never leaves home and can't enjoy the life of an average 20 year old. Living with arthritis, she is just one of 4.2 million Canadians hoping for a cure for over 115 forms of arthritis and autoimmune diseases because there are no cures – yet.

The Arthritis & Autoimmunity Research Centre Foundation's vision is to fund research which will beat arthritis and these chronic diseases.

A planned gift to the AARC Foundation can put the power of research to work at University Health Network in Toronto and make a positive difference in the lives of those living with these illnesses. And when we beat arthritis, we'll beat rheumatoid arthritis, we'll beat lupus, we'll beat scleroderma, we'll beat ankylosing spondylitis, we'll beat osteoarthritis ... we'll beat them all.

Autism Support Dogs

Providing Autism Support Dogs to children with autism age 4 to 12.

Use your Vision to support Autism

Many children living with Autism exhibit behaviours that lead to social isolation, mobility issues and a basic lack of awareness of danger in everyday situations. For parents and family members, this results in a highly stressful daily life and an inability to function normally in social settings.

An autism support dog helps to bring safety, independence and companionship for the child living with Autism and also peace of mind for their parents.

Benefits experienced include:

- Increased safety for the child
- More control of the child by commanding the dog
- Child is taught responsibility in a passive way
- Child gets a 'best friend', dog comforts child when upset
- Positive changes in behavior, lower aggression/frustration levels
- Predictability for parents in social settings
- Under the BC Guide Animal Act, autism support dogs enjoy right of full public access

There are many families waiting to receive an autism support dog -- many of whom will wait over two years to receive one. As families realize the benefits of having an autism support dog, demand is increasing. The cost to raise, train and match a support dog with a family is approximately $35,000 -- the dogs are provided at no cost to the family!

Plan today for a visionary gift that will ensure that children and families will have the support they need to live their lives to their greatest potential. Your investment, through a bequest, stocks or life insurance will make a world of difference.

Character. Service. Leadership.

Invest in the future by making a bequest or planned gift in support of the Loran Awards, the most comprehensive merit scholarship in Canada.

Granted by the Canadian Merit Scholarship Foundation, each Loran Award comprises an annual stipend of $8,000 matched by a tuition waiver up to the same amount, mentorship, and access to summer internship opportunities. The awards are renewable for up to four years of undergraduate study and are tenable at any of 24 Canadian universities. More than 80 one-time awards are also granted annually.

Why choose the Loran Awards?

- We have the most thorough assessment process in the country. We look for breadth in academic and extracurricular interests, commitment to service, integrity, entrepreneurial energy, independence of thought and willingness to take on meaningful risks.
- Loran Awards reach students across Canada — small towns and large urban centres in every province.
- Funding is leveraged through matching tuition waivers from our partner universities. Students are free to choose the best university and program for them in Canada.
- We have a 20-year track record of selecting and supporting the next generation of leaders.
- We have professional management and a distinguished board of directors.

Please contact Kara O'Brien to discuss planning your bequest or other planned gift at 1-866-544-2673, x223.

Your legacy will live on. And on.

A donkey can live for up to (and often more than) forty years. So you can imagine how your gift be well appreciated – in terms of shelter, food and care – for many many years by the remarkable animals we've rescued. To speak with us about making a bequest, call 519.836.1697 or email info@thedonkeysanctuary.ca. Thanks so much for thinking of us, and the donkeys.

Purpose: Food for the Poor Canada (FFPC) is the Canadian branch of one of the largest charities in the world, which delivers one billion dollars worth of aid each year to countries in the Caribbean and Latin America. FFPC has a great network of local partners and a profound understanding of the markets it works in. Food for the Poor Canada believes in tackling poverty at the cause; FFPC builds sustainable villages for the communities who are receiving basic aid. Homes, schools, community centres, income generating projects, farming and education are delivered to support growth in the community. This combination of basic aid and sustainable development is most effective in empowering people to break the cycle of poverty.

Philanthropy and Estate Services

Centred on your priorities

The Benefits of Integrated Solutions

The most significant charitable gifts are typically part of a Will and estate plan. While not everyone includes charitable giving in their estate plans, for those who do philanthropy is a key priority.

Scotia Private Client Group is a national leader in philanthropic planning and solutions. Our Philanthropy and Estate Services extend to serving as Executor of estates and Trustee of ongoing trusts. Our clients benefit from customized, tax-efficient strategies that align their investment, retirement, philanthropic and estate plans to help ensure financial well-being into the next generation.

Philanthropic Advisory Services

As the largest provider of Philanthropic Advisory Services to private foundations in Canada, we help clients create meaningful legacies. With innovative solutions to facilitate charitable intentions, our specialists can help establish, manage and administer private foundations and donor advised funds. We also provide assistance with planned gifts to individual charities that satisfy personal, tax, and philanthropic goals.

Our focus is on sophisticated and objective planning in support of true philanthropy. Through advice, service and working with independent lawyers, accountants and other professional advisors we deliver strategies that help balance family priorities and support philanthropic goals.

Aqueduct Foundation

Aqueduct Foundation is a registered public foundation (administered by Scotiabank) with donor advised funds. Donor advised funds are personal charitable accounts that enable strategic giving in support of your various charitable interests. Through smart, flexible philanthropic planning, Aqueduct Foundation offers opportunities for tax-effective giving that is integrated into estate plans of varying complexity. Aqueduct Foundation's donor advised fund model offers unrivalled flexibility in the choice of charities and timing of gifts, including gifts of capital.

Aqueduct Foundation is committed to creating personal legacies that provide ongoing support for the donor's favourite charitable causes. Each legacy fund is named and designed to reflect the priorities of the founding individual and/or family. Donors are encouraged to include a short biographical statement to ensure their values and wishes are understood by future generations.

Will and Estate Planning

Where appointed an Executor (Liquidator in Quebec) and/or Trustee under a client's Will we can assist in developing an estate plan aligned with a client's overall goals. We will work with the client's lawyer to create the Will and related documents, such as Powers of Attorney (mandate in Quebec) and trust deeds. We will maintain the documents in safe-keeping and periodically review the plan to help ensure it continues to meet the client's needs.

We administer, settle and manage estates and trusts of varying complexity and value in our capacity as Executor and/or Trustee. In many cases, we work with designated family members to help ensure the estate is administered in a professional and empathetic manner. In addition, we provide financial advice, practical support, and guidance to beneficiaries.

Philanthropy and Estate Services are provided by Scotia Private Client Group in our Centres across Canada.

Purpose: New Israel Fund of Canada (NIFC) works with its partner the New Israel Fund (NIF) to strengthen Israel's democracy, promoting freedom, justice and equality for all Israel's citizens as envisioned in her Declaration of Independence. With over thirty years of experience in addressing some of Israel's greatest internal challenges such as religious pluralism, widening economic gaps and domestic violence, NIF has had a significant impact on building civil society in Israel and empowering grass-roots organizations dealing with Israel's most marginalized groups. According to Israel's newspaper Haaretz "There is hardly any significant socially-oriented organization in Israel today that does not owe its existence to the NIF." NIFC is a winner of a GreatNonProfits Jewish Choice Award.

Purpose: Founded in 1967, Oolagen works with Toronto youth experiencing difficulties that severely affect their ability to cope or function in school or daily activities. At Oolagen, Listen, Assist, Engage and Empower are the key components of our work. Through listening, we gain understanding; in assisting youth and their families, we help them discover their own skills and knowledge for life, through engaging, we encourage youth to adopt a new, more hopeful view of themselves and their lives; and through this process, we support empowerment. Issues youth face include physical or sexual abuse, family violence, youth gangs, eating disorders, substance abuse, mental illness, anger management, homelessness, pregnancy and death or divorce in the family.

Ontario Shores
Foundation for Mental Health

One in five people will experience a mental illness severe enough to affect their daily activities... and four in five will know someone who does.

Ontario Shores Foundation for Mental Health raises funds to support the priorities of Ontario Shores Centre for Mental Health Sciences and its partner organizations that help care for its patients. Our primary focus is on child and youth and seniors' mental health initiatives. Donations and sponsorships are sought to fund innovation, research and teaching; mental health promotion, mental illness awareness and stigma-reduction programs; and renovating and building recovery-focused space.

Our donors and sponsors are helping us build a foundation of hope for the future.

Le don testamentaire...

gage d'espoir pour les générations prochaines

L'arthrite touche plus de 4 millions de Canadiens, y compris des enfants.

Depuis trois générations, la Société de l'arthrite travaille au mieux-être des personnes arthritiques du Canada.

Grâce à votre généreux appui sous la forme d'un don testamentaire, d'un don d'assurance, d'une rente de bienfaisance, d'un don de valeurs mobilières ou d'une fiducie résiduaire de bienfaisance, vous soutiendrez les générations prochaines dans leur lutte contre l'arthrite.

Votre don signifie de nouvelles découvertes, un espoir pour l'avenir, un traitement curatif.

Pour en savoir plus, téléphonez à votre bureau local de la Société de l'arthrite au 1.800.321.1433 ou visitez notre site Web à l'adresse www.arthrite.ca.

Le don planifié, un don pour l'espoir

Planifier un don en faveur de la Société de recherche sur le cancer c'est poser un geste de générosité en soutenant une cause qui touche chacun d'entre nous.

Un don planifié vous permet d'établir la façon la plus appropriée de donner à la Société de recherche sur le cancer, et ce, sans atténuer votre qualité de vie habituelle et celle de vos proches.

Voici quelques-unes des nombreuses possibilités qui s'offrent à vous afin d'appuyer le financement de la recherche.

- Le don testamentaire
- Le don de valeurs mobilières
- Le don de produits d'assurances-vie

Nous pouvons vous aider à planifier votre don. Communiquez avec notre service des dons majeurs et planifiés afin de connaître les avantages reliés à la planification d'un don à la Société de recherche sur le cancer.

La pièce du casse-tête qui mène au succès.

Pour plus de 37 500 avocats et avocates, l'adhésion à l'Association du Barreau canadien (ABC) constitue la pièce du casse-tête qui leur permet d'exceller.

L'ABC renforce votre pouvoir d'influencer les choses, sur le plan professionnel, en offrant des moyens de participer à la quête de solutions en matière de lois et de politiques dans votre champ du droit.

Grâce au leadership de l'ABC, vous préserverez votre avantage concurrentiel en tirant profit des ressources novatrices, des programmes de développement professionnel agréés et des enseignements de chef de file dans la profession - le tout assurant le perfectionnement de vos compétences.

L'ABC protège vos intérêts et défend les valeurs fondamentales de la profession juridique, au quotidien, en accomplissant ce que les avocats, avocates et cabinets juridiques ne pourraient accomplir seuls, c'est-à-dire en suscitant le débat sur des questions d'importance fondamentale, tels le secret professionnel, la primauté du droit, l'accès à la justice et l'indépendance de la magistrature.

Adhéz à l'ABC dès aujourd'hui : www.cba.org.

This year, 9 nursing students received awards from U of M graduate Kay Ruane

Mary Kathleen Ruane died in 2007, but she set up a bequest in her will to fund awards for nursing students in financial need. Ruane was one of the first students to enter the School of Nursing administration program at the University of Manitoba, and that education provided her with the foundation she needed for her career. Ruane gave back because she believed in the importance of education. Her gift will ensure that her legacy lives on.

The War Amps

From Generation to Generation

A philosophy of “amputees helping amputees”

has been the hallmark of
The War Amps since it was founded in 1918.

The War Amps continues to meet the needs of its war amputee members, and also operates programs such as the CHAMP
Program for child amputees.

CHAMP provides amputee children across Canada with financial assistance for artificial limbs, regional seminars, peer support,
resources and so much more.

Through CHAMP, the Association's tradition of amputees helping amputees continues.

Third Sector Publishing Acquires Canadian Who's Who

Charter Press Ltd.

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO PRESS

For immediate release

April 29, 2011

John Yates, President, Publisher, and CEO, University of Toronto Press (UTP), and Anderson Charters, President, Charter Press Ltd., are pleased to announce that Charter Press Ltd. purchased the Canadian Who's Who (CWW) from University of Toronto Press March 31, 2011.

University of Toronto Press had been publishing the Canadian Who's Who reference title annually since the late 1970s. The 2010 edition of Canadian Who's Who was the 100th anniversary edition.

CWW contains 13,500 biographical entries of prominent Canadians. In hard-cover print format, the book has 1,450 pages. "I am glad to say that we have been able to retain the services of two longtime CWW editor/researchers, Gwen Peroni and Lynn Browne, in connection with the publication of the 2011 edition of CWW," says Charters. "This will occur November of this year, in time for the Christmas book buying season."

University of Toronto Press and Charter Press Ltd. have entered a distribution agreement that will see University of Toronto Press continue to distribute Canadian Who's Who. Yates said "We are pleased that Charter Press is committed to maintaining the high editorial standards established by University of Toronto Press and that CWW will continue to be published for the benefit of all Canadians."

To order CWW, please contact UTP Distribution's Order Department at 416-667-7791 or 1-800-565-9523, or utpbooks@utpress.utoronto.ca. Editorial queries regarding the 2011 Canadian Who's Who may be directed to Gwen Peroni at 705-833-2800 or gperoni@utpress.utoronto.ca, or Lynn Browne at 905-751-1890 or lbrowne@utpress.utoronto.ca.

Regarding the importance of Canadian Who's Who to Canadian bibliography, Roch Carrier, former National Librarian, said: "These lives, summed up in a few lines, recount history as it was and is being made."

"It is our goal to continue the high editorial standards that University of Toronto Press consistently applied to Canadian Who's Who," says Charters.

University of Toronto Press is a not-for-profit company separately incorporated from the University of Toronto. It is Canada's largest scholarly publisher of books and journals. Through its Distribution division, UTP provides book distribution services to more than 70 publishers and operates seven retail stores serving U of T and the surrounding community.

Charter Press Ltd. is based in Orillia, Ontario, and under the trademark name, Third Sector Publishing, publishes the Canadian Donor's Guide, as well as CharityCan, an online service about Canadian registered charities. Anderson Charters is also a partner in Trajan Publishing of St. Catharines, Ontario, which publishes Canadian Coin News and Canadian Stamp News.

"Losing our son was tragic.
Thankfully, his spirit and legacy of compassion lives on."

When Dianne Proctor suddenly lost her only son to a brain aneurysm, she and her husband Joseph Salcak were devastated. Searching for a meaningful way to honour his memory and create some good out of such a heartbreaking tragedy, they partnered with Christian Children's Fund of Canada to build a school in Bill's name in Ghana – a country where many subsist on less than a dollar a day. From this tragedy, The Bill Proctor Children's Centre was born.

After reflecting on Bill's life, the opportunity to bring life-changing resources to children-in-need, their families and their communities, was the perfect way to create a lasting legacy and ensure Bill's compassion and spirit would live on.

To learn more about how you can create a legacy of hope in your name or that of a loved one, please contact Dorothy Tam, CFRE, Director, Major & Planned Gifts, at 1-800-263-5437 (ext. 525) or 905-754-1013 today or visit www.ccfcanda.ca

A Legacy to Remember

In addition to making a lasting difference in the lives of children, families and communities in the developing world, choosing to include CCFC in your Will or insurance policy reminds your family of your values and the compassionate life you lived.

Leave a legacy that changes lives through these planned giving options:

- A provision in your Will
- Allocations within your life insurance plan
- Part or full RRSP and RRIF donations
- Endowments in your name or that of a loved one

Before you give

Pray and discuss the matter with your family, lawyer and financial advisor. Lastly appoint an executor to ensure your life assets are handled according to your and your family's wishes.
