PUBLISHER'S NOTE

Welcome to the 27th edition of the Canadian Donor's Guide.

The purpose of the Guide remains the same as it always has been: to provide an authoritative annual directory to fundraising organizations in Canada.

Scotia Private Client Group is back for a ninth year as the Guide's sponsor. This means we continue to deliver at least 17,000 copies of our publication to key decision makers in Canada's donor community.

The Canadian Donor's Guide is also published with the co-operation of the Canadian Association of Gift Planners (CAGP), the Canadian Bar Association, and Imagine Canada.

We continue to feature an expanded Editorial Section. We are able to do this by taking advantage of the Digital Edition of the 2012-13 Canadian Donor's Guide. This is an exact replica of the print version of the Guide that you have in front of you. You view it on a computer screen by accessing it on the Internet via our website at www.donorsguide.ca.

We have a strong lineup of contributors to this year's Editorial Section, including, I am pleased to add, some younger leaders in the sector. However, in two cases, their thoughtful articles and papers run to scores of pages. Our solution: provide one page in the print edition of the Guide for the first several hundred words, and then insert a 'turn' to the full article by providing a link to it from the same page in the Digital Edition of the Guide.

Charity law in Canada is complex, largely because the regulation of charities has, over time, become entwined in this country's voluminous Income Tax Act. It is quite understandable to assume no elected Member of Parliament, or a provincial assembly, unless he or she was a tax expert before entering politics, grasps the complexities of the Income Tax Act; and therefore understands the constraints faced by registered charities and other non-profit organizations.

This may help explain the somewhat muted response to unprecedented attacks by prominent federal cabinet ministers against "foreign special interest groups." They have accused unnamed U.S. charitable foundations of funneling money to environmental groups in Canada that are challenging proposed pipeline construction that would enable the export to Asian markets of oil extracted from Alberta's Tar Sands.

The Conservative government in Ottawa backstopped some of this over-the-top rhetoric by proposing new rules in its 2012 budget to track gifts made by registered charities to other qualified charities that are used for political activity. Nevertheless, in his Opinion piece on the following page, Mark Blumberg's view is that despite this, "the budget will have little impact on charities and their involvement with the political process."

Because the federal government wished to bare its fangs a bit regarding its view that foreign interests, read U.S. environmental interests, exert undue influence on the development of Canada's energy projects, it allocated additional spending in its 2012 budget to Canada Revenue Agency to conduct audits of charities. As less than one per cent of charities are now audited every year, this measure may have the unintended consequence, at least from the government's perspective, of ridding us of more of the fraudulent activity that inevitably plagues the sector.

A more measured response from our Members of Parliament may come from the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, which is conducting a Study: Tax Incentives for Charitable Donations. Readers can find a large number of briefs to the Committee from a variety of interested parties posted on the Committee's website by going to www.parl.gc.ca, and then following a trail to Committees and then to Finance Committee.

The wide range of submissions underscore the great strength of the non-profit and voluntary sector in Canada: how its breadth covers every nook and cranny of our social fabric and geography. It also highlights its weakness politically: it is too diffuse to have the lobbying muscle that the private sector can mount in Ottawa or the provincial capitals.

Nevertheless, it is the responsibility of those in the sector advocating for the changes they wish to see to figure out how to convince our elected representatives about which reforms are a priority. The Standing Committee on Finance's Study presents a useful test in this regard.

The controversy unleashed by the intemperate remarks of some cabinet ministers may even result in some modest but effective change to the rules and regulations that enable the charitable sector, that govern it, and that currently hem it in.

To repeat one thought from previous years: something that is sometimes necessary in Canada to affect substantial change – a Royal Commission on the Reform of Charity Regulation in Canada.

New Focus on Charities and Political Activities

Mark Blumberg
Blumberg Segal LLP

There has been quite a bit of attention focused on political activities by Canadian charities over the last year. While the discussion was initially on environmental groups and the oil pipelines, the focus has started to shift to other types of charities as well as spending by for-profit corporations on political issues.

It is important to recognize that while charities are forbidden from being involved in partisan political activities, they play an important role in policy and political discussions. Registered charities can engage in allowable political activities as long as they are non-partisan, related to their legal objects and limited resources are used (generally less than ten per cent of resources).

These rules are set out in Canada Revenue Agency's (CRA) Guidance on Political Activities (CPS-022) at: <http://www.cra-arc.gc.ca/chrts-gvng/chrts/plcy/cps/cps-022-eng.html>

Charities bring knowledge, experience and resources to public policy issues. Having a conversation about the future of health care would be inadequate without hospitals. Having a conversation about education would be insufficient without input from schools and universities. Having a discussion about legislation relating to religion would be unfortunate without any churches, mosques, temples and synagogues allowed to speak on these issues.

Some subjects, such as reducing impaired driving, are almost impossible to tackle without political changes. The conversations that take place in the political space are important and it is vital that charities participate in those discussions. It would be ineffective and inefficient for charities to be working on improving society without being involved with the political process.

Canadian charities can certainly improve their reporting on political activities. Charities currently disclose some information regarding their political activities on their annual T3010 filing to CRA. This filing is required for an organization to maintain its registered charity status and to continue to issue tax receipts for donations.

Many charities and parliamentarians are unaware or misinformed of the rules and requirements relating to political activities. Enhanced educational initiatives by CRA will assist charities in understanding their legal obligations with respect to various issues, including political activities. Many charities think charities must avoid all political activities. When the rules are explained to charities and they realize they can engage in allowable political activities, this may increase the number of charities engaging in political activities to achieve their missions. Ultimately this will make charities more engaged in the political process and more effective in achieving their charitable goals.

The 2012 Federal Budget had a number of provisions that directly or indirectly may affect charities and political activities:

- suspension of the ability to issue tax receipts for incomplete T3010 filings (for example, not including fundraising costs, political activities etc.),
- more transparency by Canadian charities regarding foreign grants to Canadian charities earmarked for political activities (but no limits on them),

- transfers between Canadian charities that are earmarked for political purposes to count towards the ten per cent allowance for political activities of the donor charity and the recipient charity,
- more audits of Canadian charities including audits for political activities: currently less than one per cent of registered charities are audited every year and the budget allocates greater funds to conduct additional audits.

With the increased scrutiny on political activities I created a new blog category on Canadian charities and political activities at http://www.canadiancharitylaw.ca/index.php/blog/category/political_activities_and_canadian_charities/

Despite the discussions and media coverage after the release of the 2012 budget, the budget will have little impact on charities and their involvement with the political process. The law as it stands allows registered charities to be involved with allowable political activities and it is important that charities maintain their ability to affect policy and political discussions.

It seems that a Pandora's box has been opened. However, it is important that Canadian charities that wish to engage in political activities understand and follow the rules – whether environmental groups, “business” think tanks, or religious organizations.

CHARITY CHECKLIST

Due Diligence Checklist for Charitable Bequests

When planning your estate, should you contact charitable beneficiaries to inform them of a bequest? Traditionally, the answer to this question has been “no.” But practice is changing. Charitable bequests are becoming more common, donors more knowledgeable, and charities more sophisticated.

If you are making a charitable bequest you should, at the very least, contact charitable beneficiaries anonymously to ensure your lawyer has the correct legal name. Registered charities sometimes have an operating name that is different than their legal name. An incorrect name or designation could cause your gift to fail, which creates legal costs for your estate and trouble for your executor and other beneficiaries. Canada Revenue Agency also lists all registered charities online at <http://www.cra-arc.gc.ca/chrts-gvng/menu-eng.html>, as does CharityCan: www.charitycan.ca.

There is, however, more to making a bequest than spelling the name of the charity correctly. A bequest is probably the largest gift of your life so don't be shy about asking a few critical questions of your intended charitable beneficiaries. If the contemplated bequest is significant in value or central to your estate plan, arrange a meeting with the charity to ask questions in person. The following due diligence checklist will help you make your legacy gift more effective, prudent, and personally meaningful.

The Charitable Bequest Checklist

1. Use of bequests: What is the charity's policy on the use of undesignated bequests and planned gifts? Are they spent immediately or are they invested?
2. Accountability: Are the charity's annual report and audited statement available to the public? Will the charity send the annual report to the donor after the gift is confirmed? What percentage of annual revenue is devoted to charitable activities?
3. Gift designation: Does the charity enable donors to designate to a particular area or activity? What are purposes that are expected to be future priorities?
4. Personal endowment funds: Does the charity have an endowment that is invested to provide an annual payout for its charitable activities? Are donors able to name endowment funds with their bequest? If so, is there a minimum contribution level to establish the fund? Does the charity provide donors with financial and activity reports on individual endowment funds?
5. Privacy Policy: Does the charity have a privacy policy? Can a donor remain anonymous? If the donor is anonymous, who at the charity will know about your bequest intentions? Can the donor specify no solicitations or unwanted contact? Does the charity trade or sell names to other charities or organizations?
6. Donor recognition: Are donors of bequests and planned gifts recognized after the gifts are received? Does the charity have an optional program to recognize and involve future gift donors during life?
7. Other Types of Planned Gifts: Does the charity help donors explore tax-advantageous alternatives to bequests, such as charitable gift annuities, life insurance, and gifts of RRSP/RRIFs?
8. Staff Gift Planner: Does the charity have a staff Gift Planner or Planned Giving Officer? Does he or she have any professional designations? Has the planner adopted the Canadian Association of Gift Planners' Standards of Ethical and Professional Conduct?
9. Charity Leadership: How long has the CEO of the charity been in his/her role? What is the average tenure of staff and directors?
10. Charitable Effectiveness: Can the charity provide a concise summary of its charitable mission? Can it provide three examples of recent initiatives that have made a difference?

While the issues on this checklist will vary in importance to each person, the key consideration is how the charity deals with an inquisitive donor or advisor. Most charities appreciate passionate donors, so please, go ahead and ask tough questions. Ultimately, trust is the most important factor when making a gift of a portion of your life savings. Trust should be earned, not assumed.

CHARITABLE DONATIONS

A Summary of Tax Considerations

James M. Parks
Cassels Brock & Blackwell, LLP

OVERVIEW

Tax consequences are important in structuring charitable gifts, since proper planning can increase the benefits to the donor. The tax benefits are often a major incentive for charitable giving and should be carefully considered from the outset.

A gift to a registered charity by an individual (including a trust) entitles the donor to a non-refundable tax credit, i.e. a deduction in computing tax otherwise payable, whereas a gift by a corporation entitles it to a deduction in computing taxable income, as opposed to a tax credit. These rules are found in section 118.1 of the Income Tax Act (the “ITA”) for gifts by individuals and section 110.1 of the ITA for gifts by corporations.

2012 BUDGET PROPOSALS

The March 29, 2012 federal budget proposes changes in the rules dealing with the non-profit sector, including the following:

1. new rules to track gifts made by registered charities to other qualified donees that are used for political activity;
2. a new test for certain foreign organizations as qualified donees;
3. suspension of receipting privileges for failure to file complete information returns;
4. increased and new penalties for certain charitable donation tax shelters and promoters;

5. a time limit on the validity of tax shelter identification numbers; and
6. changes in the test for determining whether a life insurance policy is “exempt”.

BASIC TAX RULES

Individuals

An individual who makes a gift to a charity is entitled to a credit against tax otherwise payable. For purposes of this summary, the references to a “charity” include generally charities which are registered by Canada Revenue Agency (“CRA”), RCAAs, certain non-profit housing corporations, Canadian municipalities, the crown, the United Nations and certain foreign charities (including certain foreign universities) and other non-qualified donees.

Where the gift is less than $200, the federal tax credit is calculated at the lowest personal tax rate on the amount of the gift. Where the gift exceeds $200, the credit is 29% of the amount of the gift. A comparable tax credit is also available in calculating provincial taxes, with special rules applicable in Quebec.

An individual can claim a tax credit for a charitable gift of up to 75% of net income for the year. Any unused credit can be carried forward for five years and used to offset taxes in those years, subject to the 75% limit in each year. The limit does not apply in the year of death or the previous year. Unused credits not applied in the year of death can be used in the prior year, without any limit based on income.

The 75% limit is increased by an additional 25% of any taxable capital gain realized by the donor as a result of making a gift of appreciated capital property, plus 25% of the amount of any recapture of capital cost allowance realized on a gift of depreciable property (to a maximum of 25% of the lesser of the capital cost or the fair market value of the depreciable property).

CRA’s administrative position on gifts and receipts is set out in IT-110R3 entitled “Gifts and Official Donation Receipts”. In addition, useful comments are set out in a number of CRA newsletters, policy statements and consultation drafts. These newsletters, interpretation bulletins, policy statements and other information from CRA can be viewed on the CRA website at www.cra-arc.gc.ca. There is a section on the website aimed at charities and donors, called “Charities and Giving”.

Corporations

A corporation that makes a gift to a charity is entitled to a deduction in computing taxable income. However, the corporation is also subject to the income limits noted above for individuals. The corporation can claim a deduction of up to 75% of its net income for the year. If the corporation makes a gift of appreciated capital property, the limit is increased by 25% of the taxable capital gain and 25% of any recapture of capital cost allowance realized on a gift of depreciable property (to a maximum of 25% of the lesser of the capital cost or the fair market value of the depreciable property).

TYPES OF GIFTS

The following are some basic features and tax consequences of certain types of gifts.

1. Gifts by Will

Gifts are often made by will, as “testamentary” gifts. The donor (“testator”) states in a will that on death, property is to be given as a bequest or legacy to a specified charity or a charity to be chosen by the executors. The gift can be cash or property, such as a work of art or shares. If the testator leaves too much discretion to the executors in choosing a charity or the amount of the gift, CRA may allege the gift is made by the estate and not deemed to be made in the year of death.

Otherwise, the testator is deemed to have made the gift immediately before the date of death. Therefore, in the terminal return for the year of death, a tax credit is available in computing tax otherwise payable. Any unused tax credits in the year of death can be carried back and used to reduce taxes payable in the prior year. The credit is available to offset 100% of net income for the year of death and the prior year. This credit is of particular benefit in calculating tax otherwise payable in the year of death, since the deceased is deemed to have disposed of all capital assets immediately before death (subject to certain exceptions, such as for spousal rollovers) at fair market value, thereby realizing capital gains in the year of death.

CRA has stated that, consistent with its administrative policy allowing spouses to decide which of them can claim credit for a donation, regardless of the name on the official receipt, where a charitable gift is made by an individual in his or her will, and is deemed to be made in the year of death, a surviving spouse will have the option of claiming donations made by the deceased spouse in the year of death.

2. Annuities

Prior to December 20, 2002 a donor could transfer cash to a charity which undertook to pay an annuity for life to the donor, or perhaps to the donor and a spouse, as long as one of them was alive. The annuity payment received by the donor would be a blend of interest and capital, and only the interest portion would normally be taxable. If the donor transferred cash to the charity in excess of the amount expected to be received over the term of the annuity, the excess was considered under CRA's administrative policy to be a gift and the charity could issue a tax receipt for the excess. CRA's policy as stated in IT-111R2 entitled “Annuities Purchased from Charitable Organizations” was not to tax any portion of an annuity payment received by a donor in such circumstances.

If the donor died earlier than expected, the charity would keep the remaining funds. If the donor lived beyond the life expectancy, the charity had to meet its commitments and might need to use other funds to do so.

Only charitable organizations can issue annuities without adverse tax consequences. Foundations can be deregistered if they incur ineligible debt obligations. Furthermore, a charity must ensure that it has authority to issue annuities pursuant to provincial laws dealing with insurance or other relevant laws. In many cases, the charity will purchase an annuity from a financial institution rather than issuing it itself, to reduce its risk of loss.

The Department of Finance announced a number of proposed changes on December 20, 2002. These proposals were modified on December 5, 2003, in response to so-called “art flip” transactions, and eventually introduced in Bill C-33 in November, 2006 and again in Bill C-10 in November, 2007, after Bill C-33 died when Parliament prorogued. Bill C-10 also died on the order paper. The proposed changes have not been enacted as at April 30, 2012. Nevertheless, CRA is administering the law as if these changes were in place, since they will be retroactive.

One major change deals with the measurement of a gift where the donor receives some advantage in exchange, to deal with “split-receipting”. CRA has changed its administrative policy dealing with annuities and no longer applies the administrative policy in IT-111R2 for annuities issued after December 20, 2002. CRA has acknowledged that its earlier administrative position has no basis in law and cannot be continued in the face of the proposed changes. Under the proposed changes, the value of property received from a charity in exchange for a gift must be determined and that value will become the cost of that property to the charity. As a result, where an amount is transferred to a charity by a donor and the advantage received by the donor is a stream of annuity payments, the amount of the gift will be equal to the excess of the amount transferred by the donor to the charity over the amount that would be required to purchase an annuity that would provide the same payments. CRA has stated that despite the withdrawal of its administrative position, it expects charitable annuities to continue as a means of fundraising which could be more advantageous to the donor than in the past.

In an example mentioned by CRA, for a donor with a life expectancy of eight years, who actually lives for eight years and makes a cash payment of $100,000, in exchange for annuity payments of $10,000 for each of those eight years, the cost of the annuity that will pay $80,000 over eight years is $50,000. Under the former administrative practice, the donor would be entitled to a tax receipt for $20,000 in the year of the payment and would receive a total of $80,000 as annuity payments tax-free. Under the proposed changes, the donor will receive a tax receipt for $50,000 in the year of the gift, and will receive $80,000 in annuity payments, of which $30,000 will be included in income over the eight years, as blended payments.

3. Life Insurance

A charity can benefit from gifts of insurance policies in several ways. From the donor's point of view, a gift of an insurance policy allows a large donation, at a relatively small cost to the donor. CRA's administrative position on donations of life insurance policies is set out in IT-244R3 entitled “Gifts by Individuals of Insurance Policies as Charitable Donations”.

A charity can purchase a life insurance policy on the donor's life on the understanding that the donor will pay the premiums directly to the insurance company. This is often supported by a pledge to pay the premiums. The charity can issue a tax receipt to the donor for the premiums paid. On the death of the donor, the charity will receive the death benefit, but it will not be a gift by the donor. The major drawback from the charity's point of view is that there is no way to ensure that the donor will pay the premiums. However, if the donor fails to pay, the charity can surrender the policy or pay the premiums out of its own funds.

Alternatively, the donor can transfer an existing policy to the charity and agree to pay future premiums. The charity can issue a receipt for the fair market value of the gift, which may be the cash surrender value of the policy (normally only whole life or universal life policies will have a value) less any outstanding policy loans. The charity can issue a tax receipt for the premiums paid. There may be an inclusion in income of the donor on a gift of a policy if the fair market value of the policy exceeds its tax cost. CRA has acknowledged that the cash surrender value may not necessarily be the fair market value of the policy. In particular, CRA has stated that, consistent with standard valuation principles applicable to other types of property, the fair market value of a policy should be determined based on all of the relevant factors. As a result, if a qualified valuator determines that the fair market value of the policy exceeds its cash surrender value (less any outstanding policy loans) that higher amount can be shown as the eligible amount in a receipt issued by the charity. In determining the income that must be reported by the donor on a gift of a policy to a charity, the cash surrender value rather than the fair market value will be relevant. As a result, the donor will be subject to tax on the amount by which the cash surrender value (less any outstanding policy loans) exceeds the adjusted cost basis (a defined term) of the policy. CRA has confirmed that this will not be affected by the issuance of an official receipt by the charity reflecting a fair market value that is higher than the cash surrender value.

In some cases, if the charity is concerned that it will not be able to pay the premiums on a policy it acquires as a gift, the donor may make a further cash gift, which the charity can use to purchase an annuity to provide regular payments to pay the premiums as they become due. The cash payment should be eligible as a separate gift and the charity will generally be able to treat the annuity, along with the insurance policy itself, in a manner that does not cause problems in meeting its disbursement quota. Alternatively, the charity might rely on a promise from the donor (or another donor) to make annual donations to pay the premiums. This would create some risk for the charity. The ability of the charity to continue to pay the premiums on a donated policy may be a factor in determining the eligible amount of the gift based on the fair market value of the policy.

If there is reason to believe that the policy will lapse because the charity does not have funds to pay the premiums, the fair market value of the policy may be adversely affected. A registered charity is not required to pay tax on its income and should not be adversely affected if a life insurance policy is not an “exempt” policy and as the policyholder it must report income for tax purposes. I understand some charities acquire life insurance policies that are fully paid up within three to five years, with no requirement for a medical, paying the premiums with cash donations from the donor (usually the person whose life is insured). The insurance company apparently relies on a statement of good health from the insured person.

Under the proposed changes the eligible amount of a gift of a life insurance policy will be the lesser of its fair market value and the “cost” of the policy to the donor, if the gift is made within three years of the day on which the policy is acquired, under the proposed amendments discussed below. In some situations, the value of the gift could be less than expected if the policy has not been held for at least three years.

As a further alternative, the donor whose life is insured can continue to own the policy, and name the charity as the beneficiary. The donor will receive no tax relief for the premiums paid or the value of the policy, since nothing currently is being given to the charity. Under insurance law, the donor can change the beneficiary from the charity to another person. If the charity is the named beneficiary, it will receive the death benefit on the donor's death. The donor is deemed to have made a gift to the charity immediately before death, if the charity receives the death benefit under the policy within 36 months after death. The fair market value of the gift is deemed to be the fair market value, at the time of the individual's death, of the right to that transfer. The Department of Finance stated when these rules were introduced that “in nearly all cases” the fair market value at death of the right to transfer is “expected to be” the fair market value at death of the money that is ultimately received.

A donor can also use life insurance proceeds to pay a bequest in a will to a charity. The donor who owns an insurance policy can fund the bequest, naming the estate as beneficiary of the policy. The will would include a bequest equal to the death benefit from the insurance policy. On the donor's death, the estate would pay the bequest to the charity and receive the life insurance proceeds free of tax. The charity would issue a receipt for the amount of the bequest. The gift could then be used to reduce tax in the terminal return or in the return for the prior year, if there are excess credits. In some provinces, probate tax on the value of the proceeds passing through the estate may be a factor. A direct designation of a charity as a beneficiary will be treated as a donation in the year of death of the insured.

In some situations, a more complex arrangement might be used, involving shared benefits of some of the features of the policy or split ownership of the policy itself. Some plans involve shares of private corporations, corporate-owned insurance and share redemptions funded with insurance proceeds. This type of planning raises a number of regulatory and tax issues and requires sophisticated advice for both the donor and the charity.

4. Gifts of Residual Interests

A donor can give property to a charity, but maintain the right to use the property for his or her lifetime. Alternatively, the donor can establish a charitable remainder trust by transferring cash assets to a trust, reserving a right to receive payments for life and transferring the balance on death to a charity. CRA's administrative position on this type of gift is set out in IT-226R, entitled "Gifts to a Charity of a Residual Interest in Real Property or an Equitable Interest in a Trust". If certain conditions are met, CRA considers the donor has made a gift which will qualify for a tax receipt. This type of gift could be made during a person's lifetime or by a will. It is necessary to value the residual interest. This value will be the fair market value of the transferred property (usually cash) less the present value of the reserved interest, taking into account an appropriate discount rate, the life expectancy of the donor, current interest rates and any other relevant circumstances. This type of gift is analogous to a charitable annuity. If there is a right to encroach on the capital of the property, CRA takes the view that the value of the residual interest will be nil. A trust will generally be required for gifts of property other than real estate, so a residual interest in the trust is donated to the charity.

For example, an individual donor may wish to donate a work of art to a charity, but retain possession of the art until her death. In these circumstances, if the donor transfers title in the art to a trust of which the charity is the residual beneficiary at the time of the gift, the donor has made a gift of a residual interest in the trust, the value of which is based on the factors mentioned above. A gift of a residual interest may result in a capital gain to the donor if the value of the property exceeds its adjusted cost base, determined in accordance with a formula applied by CRA.

CRA has stated that the gift of a beneficial interest in the capital of a charitable remainder trust would not automatically be treated as a gift of a non-qualifying security, but the general anti-avoidance rule might apply if the trust held non-qualifying securities. CRA stated that in determining whether a gift of a beneficial interest in the capital of a trust is a non-qualifying security, it will consider whether the trust is "affiliated" with the donor immediately after the gift was made. If the donor retains a beneficial interest in the income of the trust, the donor may be "affiliated" with the trust. Whether this is the case will be a question of fact. A trust and a person are affiliated if the person is a "majority-interest beneficiary". This includes a person who has a beneficial interest in the income of the trust if it has a fair market value that is greater than 50% of the fair market value of all beneficial interests. It also includes a person where that person and an affiliated person together hold beneficial interests in the income of the trust if the fair market value of those interests is greater than 50% of all of the fair market value of all beneficial interests.

Using a charitable remainder trust or a gift of a residual interest often involves reliance on administrative policies of CRA and raises a number of technical issues. The Department of Finance is considering changes in the ITA dealing with charitable remainder trusts, but no amendments have been introduced. Specific advice should be sought before this type of planning is utilized.

5. Gifts of Capital Property

A donor of capital property is deemed to have received proceeds of disposition equal to the fair market value of the property. If the fair market value exceeds the cost, a capital gain will be realized. The capital gains inclusion rate is 50%. In addition, if the property is depreciable property, there may be recapture of capital cost allowance previously claimed, which is fully included in income.

A donor can reduce capital gains tax on a gift of appreciated capital property to a charity, by designating in the tax return in the year in which the gift is made, the transfer price as an amount not greater than the fair market value of the property and not less than its adjusted cost base. The donor will then be deemed to have disposed of the property for the designated amount and considered to have made a gift of the designated amount when calculating the tax credit or deduction. This permits the donor to avoid a capital gain altogether, or create the desired amount of capital gain (for example to offset capital losses). Certain restrictions apply in the case of a non-resident individual disposing of Canadian real estate to a charity.

For gifts of securities traded on a designated stock exchange (such as shares, bonds, warrants and debentures) and mutual fund shares or units or shares or interests in certain segregated funds, the amount to be included as a taxable capital gain is nil. It is thus more tax-efficient for the donor to give such securities directly to a charity, rather than sell them and give the proceeds to the charity.

Ordinarily, an employee who exercises a stock option is taxed on a benefit equal to the difference between the fair market value of the shares at the time of exercise and the sum of the exercise price plus the amount paid for the option. In certain circumstances, the employee can claim a deduction against the stock option benefit so the taxable portion of the benefit is equal to the taxable portion of a capital gain (50% currently). Where an employee stock option is exercised for marketable securities which are given to a qualified donee within 30 days of the option being exercised and certain other conditions are met, the taxable benefit is reduced to one-quarter of the benefit. Individuals who make qualifying donations of marketable securities acquired through such stock options are not required to include any amount of the benefit.

Taxpayers who own eligible unlisted exchangeable securities can exchange them without causing tax to be payable on a gain. There is no tax on a gain on the exchange, and the donor can receive a receipt for the donation of the listed securities received on the exchange, again without recognizing a gain. The beneficial treatment for capital gains on gifts of marketable securities applies to capital gains on the exchange (with some exceptions) of unlisted securities for listed securities where:

- (a) at the time they were issued, the unlisted securities included a condition allowing the holder to exchange them for the listed securities;

- (b) the listed securities are the only consideration received on the exchange; and
- (c) the listed securities are donated within 30 days after the exchange.

There are special rules for exchangeable partnership interests. These are intended to ensure that gains attributable to a reduction in the adjusted cost base of the partnership interest are not exempt.

A gift of a “non-qualifying security” to a charity will be ignored in determining the tax deduction or credit in most cases. A non-qualifying security generally includes an obligation of the donor or a non-arm’s length person, a share issued by a corporation with which the donor does not deal at arm’s length or any other security issued by the individual or a non-arm’s length person. Specifically excepted are obligations, shares or securities listed on designated stock exchanges and deposits with financial institutions.

If the property is disposed of within five years of receipt of the gift, or the property ceases to be a “non-qualifying security” within the five year period, the individual will be treated as having made a gift at that time. This rule does not apply to an “excepted gift”, which is generally a gift of a share made to an arm’s length qualified donee that is not a private foundation. Where the donee is a charitable organization or a public foundation, the donor must deal at arm’s length with all of the donee’s directors or trustees. CRA considers the relevant time when the donor must deal at arm’s length with the donee is immediately after the gift. The objective of these rules is to deny a tax credit for certain types of gifts, including shares of privately held companies, subject to some relief if the donee disposes of the security within five years. The rules apply where the non-qualifying security is donated to a trust of which the registered charity is a beneficiary.

Provisions dealing with “loan-back” arrangements apply where a person donates property to a charity which is not dealing at arm’s length with the person and receives a loan from the charity, or is allowed to use the property donated to the charity. The fair market value of the gift is reduced for purposes of calculating the tax credit. These rules apply to certain arm’s length arrangements. CRA’s administrative position on gifts of capital property is set out in IT-288R2 entitled “Gifts of Capital Properties to a Charity and Others” and IT-297R2 entitled “Gifts in Kind to Charity and Others”.

The Federal Court of Appeal has held that a donor of a “non-qualifying security” could claim a deduction later when the security was sold and replaced. The charity received a gift of promissory notes issued by a corporation that was controlled by the donor. It sold them to a business associate of the donor for new notes. CRA argued that the donor and the purchaser were not dealing at arm’s length and the new notes continued to be “non-qualifying”. Based on the facts, the court held that when the charity sold the notes and received similar notes from the purchaser, there was a “reliable basis” for treating the face value of the original notes as their fair market value at the time of the gift. CRA argued that the rules were intended to prevent a donor from claiming relief for a gift while retaining control over the funds and the charity had simply substituted notes from the purchaser for notes of the corporation controlled by the donor. The court distinguished between the “loan-back” rules and the broader rules dealing with “non-qualifying securities” and found nothing offensive in the way the charity sold the notes to permit the donor to claim tax relief. Significantly, the court found that despite the business relationship between the donor and the purchaser, they were dealing at arm’s length. The court rejected an argument that the general anti-avoidance rule denied tax relief for the gift in the later year.

The 2011 budget enacted new rules for non-qualifying securities. Recognition of a gift is deferred until the time within five years of the donation that the qualified donee has disposed of the non-qualifying security for consideration that is not, to any person, another non-qualifying security. An anti-avoidance rule provides that, if as a result of a series of transactions, a particular person holds a non-qualifying security of a donor and the donee has acquired a non-qualifying security of that person or of the donor, the gift will be deferred until such time (within five years of the donation) as the donee disposes of the non-qualifying security for consideration that is not another non-qualifying security of any person.

Prior to the 2011 budget, if a shareholder donated flow-through shares, no tax was payable on the resulting capital gain, and the donor could also claim a tax credit based on the fair market value of the shares. Under the 2011 changes the capital gain is realized on a gift. Certain hybrid arrangements have been developed by tax shelter promoters to deal with flow through shares by combining donations with sales.

The Tax Court of Canada treated payments under a tax shelter arrangement involving leveraged loans as an investment rather than a gift. Without relying on the proposed “split-receipting” rules, the court held that the taxpayer did not make a gift at all (even of the cash portion) to the charity because a significant benefit flowed to the taxpayer. The CRA website contains information about potential problems for donors dealing with tax shelters and other arrangements that involve the issuance of official receipts for more than a cash donation made with no strings attached. CRA has said it will challenge arrangements that seem to be “too good to be true”, particularly where the donor does not just pay cash or transfer property, but is involved in a more complex arrangement with a charity, a promoter or others.

CRA has stated that where an individual owns “thin” controlling voting shares of a private corporation, under which she is not entitled to receive dividends or to participate beyond a nominal amount on winding up, but controls the corporation, in some circumstances it will treat the shares as having more than a nominal value. A gift of those shares to a registered charity could offer flexibility in dealing with the valuation issue, particularly if an election is made to treat the amount of the gift as the adjusted cost base of the shares. However, this could raise a number of other issues, including potential problems under the excess business holdings rules for private foundations (as discussed below) and “acquisition of control” issues for public foundations and private foundations.

As discussed more fully below, the proposed amendments will significantly change the rules for determining the value of gifts of property in many situations.

6. Gifts of Art, Cultural and Ecological Property

(i) Art

Certain gifts of inventory by an artist receive special treatment. In those circumstances, where an appropriate designation is made, an artist is entitled to a credit based on the fair market value of the property but no income is triggered on the disposition.

Artwork is generally considered to be personal-use property unless it is inventory. Personal-use property is property that is used primarily for the personal use or enjoyment and includes jewellery, clothing, furniture, and certain works of art. For purposes of calculating the capital gain or loss, the adjusted cost base and proceeds of disposition of personal-use property are deemed to be at least $1,000. This rule eases the compliance and administrative burden associated with the reporting of dispositions of personal-use property. The $1,000 deemed adjusted cost base and deemed proceeds of disposition for personal-use property will not apply if the property is acquired after February 27, 2000, as part of an arrangement in which the property is given to a charity. Therefore, where this type of property with a value of less than $1,000 is donated to a charity in those circumstances, it will no longer be treated as personal-use property, and any resulting capital gain will be taxable.

(ii) Cultural Property

A gift of certified cultural property to a designated institution will not trigger a capital gain. The donor will be allowed a credit (if an individual) or a deduction (if a corporation) for the fair market value of the property and will not be limited to 75% of income. There are special rules for determining the fair market value of cultural property. In addition, any capital gain on an object that is donated is exempt from tax. The determination is made by the Canadian Cultural Property Export Review Board and there are extensive rules for the procedures to be followed and appeals if the amount determined is not acceptable to the donor. The Board must certify the property and designate the institution.

Any unused credits or deductions can be carried forward for five years, or back one year in the event of death. Charities receiving gifts of cultural property are subject to a penalty tax in certain circumstances if they dispose of the gifted property within ten years of its receipt. CRA's administrative position on gifts by artists is set out in IT-504R2 entitled “Visual Artists and Writers”, and its position on gifts of cultural property set out in IT-407R4 entitled “Dispositions of Cultural Property to Designated Canadian institutions”.

(iii) Ecological Property

There are similar rules for gifts of ecologically sensitive property to the crown, a municipality or a charity that is approved for the conservation and protection of the environment. There are incentives for owners of ecologically sensitive land to protect that land while at the same time qualifying for a tax benefit. The precise nature of the conveyance of property will depend on legal issues and in some cases there may be split ownership.

There are special valuation rules for gifts of ecological property. These include gifts of the land itself and gifts of easements over the land. The use of easements provides some flexibility, permitting the owner to retain legal title while fettering its future use and preventing development, but this can raise difficult valuation issues in some cases. The fair market value will be determined by the Minister of the Environment and there are extensive rules for the procedures to be followed and appeals if the amount determined is not acceptable to the donor. As in the case of gifts of cultural property, a charity accepting a gift is subject to a penalty if it disposes of the property within ten years or changes its use without the consent of the Minister of the Environment. Under the Ecological Gifts Program, Environment Canada certifies that land is ecologically sensitive and an expert panel certifies the value. Gains realized on gifts made after May 1, 2006 are exempt. Where gifts were made prior to that date, 50% of the gain is taxable.

7. Gifts of Inventory

Unlike gifts of capital property, gifts of inventory do not permit the donor to choose an amount between the cost of the property and its fair market value. As a result, a gift of property that is part of the inventory of a business will result in an income inclusion. While there will be a corresponding eligible amount for the gift (the eligible amount will depend on whether any advantage is received by the donor), it is frequently less advantageous to donate inventory rather than capital property. This is one of the reasons why special rules were enacted for gifts of inventory made by artists, as discussed above.

Changes introduced in the March 19, 2007 budget permit corporations to claim a deduction for gifts of medicine held in inventory to a registered charity, if the charity has received financial assistance from CIDA and uses the medicine in carrying out its foreign activities. For gifts made on or after July 1, 2008, the medicine must have been available to be used by the charity at least six months prior to its expiration date and must qualify as a drug (within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act) which meets certain technical requirements. In addition, a prescribed return must be filed and the charity must in the opinion of the Minister of International Cooperation meet certain conditions prescribed by regulation. This limits the situations in which corporations can claim tax relief for donations of medicine from inventory.

8. Gifts to the Crown

A gift to Her Majesty in right of Canada or Her Majesty in right of a Province (a “crown gift”) is subject to the same income limitation as other gifts, i.e. 75% of the donor's income for the year plus 25% of any taxable capital gain, plus an amount equal to 25% of recapture of previously claimed capital cost allowance. Consequently, crown gifts provide the same tax relief as gifts to other charities. There are separate rules for gifts made prior to 1997 to the federal or provincial crown.

For this purpose, the crown will include an agent of the crown. In early 2008, the federal government amended the Museums Act to include the new Canadian Museum for Human Rights. Gifts to that museum and the other museums listed in that Act (including, for instance, the National Gallery of Canada, the Canadian Museum of Civilization and the Canadian Museum of Nature) will all be treated as gifts to the crown.

9. Charitable Donations of RRSPs, RRIFs and TFSAs

Donations made as a consequence of a direct designation of proceeds of RRSPs, RRIFs or TFSAs to a charity on the death of an individual qualify as gifts eligible for the individual donation tax credit, if the transfer of funds from RRSPs or RRIFs to the charity occurs within 36 months of death. The transfer is deemed to be a gift made immediately before death by the individual to the charity. The fair market value of the gift is deemed to be the fair market value, at the time of the individual's death, of the right to the transfer. Since the balance in an RRSP or RRIF is treated as income in the year of death, in the absence of a rollover to a spouse, the credit for a gift to charity in the year of death will effectively eliminate the tax otherwise payable on the balance, if there is a direct designation. This is the same result as if there were a bequest by will of the amount included in income under the RRSP or RRIF, without having to determine the amount in advance. A direct designation of a charity will be treated as a donation. The same comments made above with respect to the valuation of a gift where there is a direct designation under a life insurance policy apply to direct designations of proceeds of RRSPs, RRIFs and TFSAs.

Anti-Terrorism Rules

Very broad rules in the ITA and other legislation give sweeping powers to the federal government to try to address abuses through which terrorism is funded through Canadian registered charities. Donors should be aware of these rules and carry out appropriate due diligence before making donations to organizations that may be subject to these rules. Similarly, charities should carefully consider the identity of donors, and the way in which donors have obtained funds and other donated property. Charities should review their lists of donors for organizations that may be identified as terrorist groups or affiliated with such groups or that might (even unknowingly) be assisting that type of activity. This can be of particular concern for organizations that are members of affiliated groups of charities, since one organization can be exposed for activities of another in certain circumstances. Both charities and donors would be well advised to consider these issues if there is any possibility of a terrorist connection.

CRA has issued a checklist to help charities and donors identify potential problems and assist charities in developing good management practices. In addition to the ITA, the Charities Registration (Security Information) Act ("CRSIA") may be relevant. Under the CRSIA and the ITA, registration can be revoked if a charity makes its resources available, directly or indirectly, to a "listed entity" for purpose of the Criminal Code or an entity that engages in "terrorist activities" or activities that "support" terrorist activities. There are other prohibitions on funding or otherwise facilitating terrorism. More information can be obtained from the CRA website.

The annual T3010 return that must be filed by registered charities requires disclosure of information about funding, and in particular information about funding from non-resident donors.

Proposed Changes

A number of changes proposed for charities and charitable donations were introduced in former Bill C-10. These will be retroactive when enacted. One significant change deals with "split receipting", under which the value of a gift will be the excess of the value of the property given over the value of any benefit or advantage received by the donor or a person not dealing at arm's length with the donor. As noted above, this is the basis for the new administrative position dealing with charitable annuities. CRA has indicated that this policy will also apply to situations in which a payment is made, for which some consideration is received from the charity, such as recognition, a small gift, membership, a meal, etc. The previous administrative practice of CRA was not supported by the law and CRA and the Department of Finance are attempting to rectify this. Under the proposals, a charity will be required to place a value on any benefit received by the donor in exchange for the payment, and issue a receipt only for the net amount. There will be some limits on the scope of this change, which will apply to gifts made after December 20, 2002.

The proposed amendments include significant changes in the rules for determining the value of a gift in kind. As a result of perceived abuses arising out of arrangements under which property was acquired at a low cost and valued at a much higher cost when donated, an arbitrary rule is proposed under which the value of the property will not exceed its cost, if the gift occurs within three years of acquisition of the property. This rule will apply regardless of the actual value of the property. In addition, if property is acquired with any expectation that it may be given during the lifetime of the owner, its value cannot exceed its cost. These rules will not apply to gifts of inventory, marketable securities, Canadian real estate, certified cultural property or approved ecological property or to gifts on death. As a result, all other gifts of capital property will be subject to these new valuation rules.

In determining the fair market value of the donated property, the intention of the donor at the time of acquisition will now be relevant. If one of the main reasons for acquiring the property was to make a gift (other than by will), in most cases the donor will have to use the acquisition cost as the fair market value at the time of the gift. For both gifts that are subject to the three year rule and gifts that are subject to the ten year rule, there will be extensive "tracing" rules to deal with transfers of property prior to the time of the gift.

These new rules will also apply to property that was acquired under what is called a “gifting arrangement” for tax shelter reporting purposes, or involving debt that the donor may not have to pay. An anti-avoidance rule will address situations in which a cash gift is made and the charity uses the cash to buy property from the donor at more than its cost. These new rules are very far reaching and unless they are changed before they are implemented, will have a very serious effect on a number of situations in which donors expect to receive credit for the value of the gift rather than its cost.

The proposals will reduce the value of the gift by any advantage that is in any way related to the gift. The scope of the wording is uncertain and it will be difficult to apply in many cases. CRA has indicated that it expects charities to undertake due diligence in establishing the fair market value based on the “cost” approach, and in determining the value of any advantage that would reduce the eligible amount of a gift.

If a donor fails to inform the registered charity of circumstances that reduce the eligible amount, despite the amount shown on the official receipts, under the proposals the eligible amount will be nil. This is a serious penalty for a donor who is prepared to gamble that an advantage will not reduce the eligible amount of the gift. Registered charities are advised to review carefully the circumstances in which gifts of property are received, when determining the eligible amount of the gift. In many cases, this will require consultations with the donor.

The proposals also deal with the rules for designation of a registered charity as a charitable organization, public foundation or private foundation and a new “control” test, based on commercial law concepts, such as arm’s length and de facto control. These changes will apply after 1999.

CRA can assess charities for intermediate sanctions. These give CRA the option of assessing tax or penalties rather than revoking registration, for various types of non-compliance, such as issuing improper receipts, carrying on an unrelated business (in the case of a charitable foundation or charitable organization) or carrying on any business (in the case of a private foundation), acquiring control of a corporation, conferring an undue benefit and other defaults. The rules for creating endowments, transfers between charities and meeting the disbursement quota require charities to plan carefully. Anti-avoidance rules prevent “trafficking” in unused charitable donations made by corporations. In some cases, unused deductions for previous donations have been available to a subsequent purchaser of the shares of a corporation.

The T3010 return contains public information and also assists CRA in ensuring that charities comply with the requirements in the ITA. With the introduction of intermediate sanctions and the new rules for excess business holdings by private foundations, the revised form requires additional information that will assist CRA in determining whether penalties should be assessed.

A private foundation that owns more than 2% of any class of shares of a corporation is required to report its holdings together with those of persons not dealing at arm’s length with it, when filing its T3010 return for the year. Where the holdings of a foundation exceed 2% and the combined holdings of the foundation and all non-arm’s length persons exceed 20%, either the foundation or the other persons (or the group collectively) is required to divest to below the 20% level. If the divestiture does not occur within stipulated periods of time, the foundation will be subject to penalties. CRA can treat non-arm’s length persons as dealing at arm’s length, if sufficient reasons are given. There are transitional rules for private foundations that held shares on March 19, 2007.

These complex rules are apparently intended to address concerns about potential “self-dealing”. Exemptions for “entrusted shares” (shares donated before March 19, 2007 on condition that the foundation retain them) exclude from the divestiture requirements certain unlisted shares held by the foundation on March 18, 2007. Although there is no divestiture requirement, these shares are taken into account in determining whether other shares of the same class are subject to the regime. There are “look-through” rules for trusts in which a private foundation has an interest, if the trust owned the shares on March 18, 2007, rules dealing with “substituted” shares that are acquired in the course of certain tax-deferred corporate reorganizations and a remedy where a foundation owns entrusted shares which it cannot sell.

RECENT CHANGES

The 2010 budget changed the disbursement quota and repealed the definition of “specified gift”, “capital gains pool” and “enduring property”. A registered charity must disburse at least 3.5% of the average value of its accumulated investment assets in the preceding two years on its own charitable activities or by making grants to qualified donees. Charitable organizations with less than $100,000 of such assets and charitable foundations with less than $25,000 of such assets are not subject to this requirement. Donors are no longer required to impose restrictions on gifts to permit registered charities to retain capital and spend only the income or a portion of the income. CRA has a great deal of discretion in administering some of the new rules. The underlying charity law and trust law concepts have not been changed and will require consideration in specific situations. Gifts made previously with restrictions that prevent the charity from spending the capital will still be restricted, despite the relief in the budget.

The 2011 budget made several changes. Non-recognition of capital gains on donations of flow-through shares to qualified donees is no longer available, and there are complicated rules to track pools of flow-through shares. The donation credit or deduction is not available to a taxpayer for granting an option to a qualified donee to acquire property from the taxpayer until the donee acquires property of the taxpayer covered by the option. Consistent with the proposals dealing with split receipting, a tax credit or donation is generally not available to the taxpayer if the total amount paid by the qualified donee for property and for the option is greater than 80% of the fair market value of the property at the time the qualified donee acquires it.

New rules apply where a qualified donee has received property from a donor and issued an official receipt but is required to return the property to the taxpayer. This could occur after the limitation period has expired for reassessment of the year in which the donation was made. The rules permit reassessments to be made to disallow a claim for a credit or deduction where property is later returned by the qualified donee and for consequential adjustments to be made. If property for which a taxpayer received an official receipt is later returned, the qualified donee must issue a revised receipt and send a copy of it to CRA if the amount of the receipt changes by more than $50. Qualified donees must file an information return to disclose returned gifts.

CRA will identify in a publicly available list all qualified donees, including registered charities, RCAAAs, Canadian municipalities, certain municipal and public bodies performing a function of government in Canada, certain housing corporations, prescribed foreign universities and certain foreign organizations to which the federal crown has made a gift in the recent past. Qualified donees are subject to some of the compliance rules that now apply to registered charities and are required to maintain and make available proper books and records and issue proper receipts. Failure to do so could lead to suspension of receipting privileges, removal from the list of qualified donees or revocation of registration, in the case of RCAAAs.

RCAAAs are required to have the promotion of amateur athletics in Canada as their exclusive purpose and function. Previously, they could have this as their primary purpose and function. RCAAAs are subject to rules dealing with the conferral of undue benefits and carrying on an unrelated business, similar to the rules that apply to registered charities.

CRA can refuse to register or revoke the registration of a charity or RCAAA or to suspend its receipting privileges if a director or equivalent official is found to have been involved in certain inappropriate conduct. This generally would be the case if that person has been found guilty of a criminal offence in Canada (or outside Canada, if that offence, committed in Canada, would be a criminal offence) relating to financial dishonesty and has not received a pardon. It will also apply to directors or equivalent officials who had been involved in the operation of a charity or RCAAA that was engaged in serious non-compliance for which its registration was revoked within the past five years or who were “promoters” of a “gifting arrangement” or other tax shelter in which a registered charity or RCAAA participated, if the registration of the charity or RCAAA was revoked within the past five years. These rules will raise a number of issues that will be important to donors when reviewing the status of donees. CRA has stated that there is no requirement to disclose the existence of ineligible individuals in an annual return and generally it will use an educational process if it finds ineligible individuals are acting as trustees or directors, and ask the registered charity or RCAAA to remove them. This could raise non-tax issues in many cases.

2012 BUDGET

In the March 29, 2012 budget, the federal government introduced a number of proposed changes. Under current rules, registered charities can make gifts to qualified donees, without being concerned about the use to which the qualified donee puts the transferred funds. Under the proposals, where a gift is made to a qualified donee and it can reasonably be considered that a purpose of the gift is to support the political activities of the qualified donee, the gift will be considered to be an expenditure made by the gifting charity on political activities. As a result, it will be required to take into account that gift as well as amounts expended on its own political activities. Technical rules will be introduced to prevent the gifting charity from claiming “credit” for those gifts in determining whether its purposes are exclusively charitable and in determining whether it has met its disbursement quota. CRA has said that it will require additional disclosure in the T3010 return for gifts to qualified donees that are to be used for political activities.

The budget will “encourage tax shelter registration and reporting” by changing the penalty applicable to a promoter in certain circumstances, introducing a new penalty for a promoter who fails to meet the reporting obligations and limiting the period for which a tax shelter identification number is valid to one calendar year.

The budget will change the rules for registering certain foreign charitable organizations as qualified donees. A foreign charitable organization that receives a gift from the federal crown will be able to apply for qualified donee status if it pursues activities that are related to disaster relief or urgent humanitarian aid or that are in the national interests of Canada. The Minister of National Revenue will have discretion to grant qualified donee status. Where that status is granted, information will be made public and status will be limited to a 24 month period which will generally start on the day on which the gift is received from the crown. Foreign charitable organizations that qualified under the current rules will continue to be qualified donees until their current status expires. This new rule will apply starting on the later of January 1, 2013 or the day on which the change receives Royal Assent.

The budget will change the rules for determining whether a life insurance policy is “exempt”. Exempt policies offer advantages to policyholders because the accumulation of value within the policy is not currently taxed. In some cases, exempt policies can be tax planning vehicles.

Woman Turns Personal Heartache into Hope for Others

*Francesca Young-Cvetkovich,
Donor*

Fourteen-year-old Kande Alhassan lives in the Kasuliyili community in Ghana and enjoys attending junior high. One day, she felt really ill and stayed home.

"I felt very weak with body pains and fever," she recalls. "My father, who is a traditional man, decided to treat me with local herbs, but there was no progress."

After a few days of illness with no sign of recovery, Kande was rushed to the Kasuliyili Clinic of Hope and treated for severe malaria.

"They put me on a transfusion and gave me the necessary medication," she says. "I am now back at school with my friends and am happily continuing my studies."

Kande's story could have ended very differently if the clinic had not been there.

The clinic was funded by Francesca Young-Cvetkovich, a Canadian who used her own hardships as a springboard to help others. Her parents, husband, and a close friend passed away in – what seemed to be – a very short time frame. But through the pain, Francesca was reminded how many others around the world are also suffering.

She decided to sponsor children with Christian Children's Fund Canada (CCFC), helping to provide food, clean water, medical care, and opportunities for children in developing countries.

"Writing letters, receiving photos and school reports is an excellent way of knowing how your donation is being used," Francesca says. "You can see the improvements in the children's health and education. You hear in their own words how happy they are to learn at school."

Francesca was so inspired by the progress of her nine sponsored children that she wanted to do more. So she used the money from the sale of her parents' home to fund a health clinic in Ghana and six rainwater harvesting tanks for six different villages. These tanks are an environmentally friendly way to collect, filter, and store rainwater.

The clinic opened in March 2009 and is now helping about 8,400 people in the community. Many children are doing better in school because they are healthier and stronger.

Recently, Francesca decided to fund an expansion to the clinic through CCFC. This expansion accommodates two healthcare practitioners who are permanently stationed at the clinic and are available to take care of clients day and night. The construction efforts include two bedrooms, a kitchen, and toilet. The government in Ghana also decided to contribute to Francesca's cause by providing electricity for the area surrounding the clinic, something that had not been offered before.

The availability of staff during all hours means so much to community members and new mothers like Barikasu Asana, who went into labour in the middle of the night.

"I was afraid because if no one could help me at the clinic, I would have to travel for about five kilometres before I could find a health service," she says. "But I went to the clinic and received attention from the mid-wife and delivered safely."

"I am very grateful for this wonderful clinic," she says. "Thank you Francesca and CCFC for saving me and my baby."

CAUSES AND CHARITIES

Don't Let Your Head Get in the Way of the Heart

Paul Nazareth,
Scotia Private Client Group

This is going to sound odd coming from someone who has spent over a decade encouraging Canadians to “plan their giving” – but here goes: Don't over-think it.

Not the estate, tax and financial planning mind you. It's always an important aspect to work with your advisors, but that's the last step. Personal philanthropy doesn't start with how: it's all about the what, then why, and lastly who.

What is your dream? Focus on the outcome. Do you want to help children learn about art, science or how to deal with economic, physical, or family challenges? Do you want to rescue animals or provide free veterinarian services to seniors so taking care of their loved animal doesn't become a financial burden? Do you want to memorialize a loved one with a scholarship, award or community initiative?

The hundreds of Canadians I've served during my career are often stuck in the mindset of “giving programs”, “annual campaigns”, and are busy walking, running, or swimming for a cause. They aren't used to thinking about their own personal dream of how they want to create impact.

New donation tax incentives and giving tools like donor advised funds have given Canadians the ability to transcend fundraising and engage in a planning conversation with outcomes only as limited as you can dream.

This is heart conversation, no math involved.

Why are you making this gift? To express your personal values? To teach your children and community these values? It's a powerful thing to walk backwards through your life and consider what institutions and people changed it. To thank those who made you who you are today.

In his fascinating discussion, The Moral Biography of Wealth: Philosophical Reflections on the Foundation of Philanthropy, Paul G. Schervish considers the ethical, personal, spiritual and social factors that form our values and how that becomes your philanthropic vision. This is the statement that the “testament” in “Last Will and Testament” is supposed to be! Although your head will do the reasoning, when we talk about values, your heart is still doing the heavy lifting.

Who do you trust to fulfil your personal legacy? Do you already give to charities that carry out your current charitable priorities? Is it time to find ones that are connected to your future legacy? That is exactly why this guide was created! During my years working in charities I would get calls from donors who were given the Canadian Donor's Guide by their advisor. When they connected with our charity because of shared values and personal mission, I was grateful we participated in the Donor's Guide. Today, the online version of this guide gives you some of the best search capabilities by sector, geography and impact. Fire up your desktop, laptop or tablet and take a look if you're not reading online right now.

Once you've decided on matters of the heart, now is the time to let your trusty head take the wheel. Connect with your advisor and consider how best to structure your gift today as part of your financial plan and tomorrow as part of your estate. Speak with a philanthropic advisor about balancing your family needs, tax issues and charitable wishes.

At Scotia Private Client Group, we engage in all aspects of philanthropy as part of your estate plan. We help you clarify your wishes and articulate your motivation as you answer the powerful questions of What, Why and Who, so that the implementation isn't just impactful but is as caring and thoughtful as you are. We do this through our services as estate executor and with Aqueduct Foundation, a personal planning foundation with private donor advised funds.

If you choose with your heart, and plan with your head, your gifts will be your hands, changing the world for better, today and tomorrow.

SPOUSAL TRUSTS

Tax Treatment of Charitable Donations from Spousal Trusts

Charities and advisors in the area of gift planning must ensure that they fully understand the rules surrounding donations to registered charities from spousal trusts. The tax consequences to a deceased taxpayer, as well as to the taxpayer's estate, of a charitable donation in a Will can vary significantly depending on the precise terms and wording of the document. It is important to understand the potential pitfalls.

In a technical interpretation released in December 2011, CRA offered clarification on this issue that will be beneficial both to charities and donors (and to their advisors).

CRA confirmed that where a gift constitutes a "gift by the individual's Will", a tax credit may be claimed on the deceased taxpayer's terminal return, with any excess carried back to the year preceding death. The clearest cases of a gift by Will are bequests or outright gifts of residue.

Where a Will creates a spousal trust, with a gift to charity upon the death of the surviving spouse, it must be determined whether the charity received an equitable interest in the trust upon the death of the taxpayer. CRA stated that, in general, where the terms of the spousal trust direct the trustees to make a donation to the charity of a specific property, amount or percentage of the residue, the gift will likely constitute a gift of an equitable interest in the spousal trust. This would result in the gift being claimable on the taxpayer's terminal return, and not by the trust.

It is noteworthy that CRA has in the past taken the position that non-discretionary distributions do not constitute gifts by Will nor gifts from the trust, on the basis that they are made in satisfaction of a binding obligation in the trust document (and as such are not voluntary). While this position has always been questioned, charities and advisors should remain cautious when recommending non-discretionary distributions to a charity from a spousal trust on the death of the surviving spouse. In some cases, it may be prudent to restructure the gift as an immediate donation upon death or a discretionary gift by the estate trustees. Subject to the issues below, these approaches may provide greater certainty regarding the tax consequences.

CRA stated that where a Will reflects donative intent, but the trustee has some discretion respecting the gift, the tax treatment will depend on the circumstances and the precise wording of the Will. If the Will provides for encroachment in favour of the surviving spouse, but this encroachment is limited to all trust property except that designated for charitable donation, this would likely constitute a gift by Will in the year of the taxpayer's death. If the trustee has discretion whether to make the gift, and chooses to make a gift from the spousal trust upon the death of the surviving spouse, this will normally be treated as a gift from the trust in the year of the spouse's death and not a gift by Will claimable on the taxpayer's terminal return. The trust would therefore claim a credit in the year of the spouse's death.

Where, however, the Will provides for unlimited encroachment in favour of the surviving spouse, this will normally disqualify the gift as its ultimate value may be too uncertain. CRA notes, however, that it may accept a gift as having been made by Will in the year of the taxpayer's death if the surviving spouse irrevocably disclaims his or her interest in the capital (or specific property) and the trustees undertake not to exercise their authority to make the capital or specific property of the trust available to the spouse.

It is clear that the tax consequences where a gift is made from a spousal trust can vary significantly. Considerable care must be taken when drafting Wills to ensure the desired tax result. Charities must also be familiar with these rules to ensure that all receipts are issued properly.

CHARITY FRAUD

Protecting Your Good Name

The charity sector represents the best of what makes us 'Canadian' – a belief that we can, through determination, dedication and a united effort, succeed in making better the lives of others who are less fortunate or disadvantaged. Unfortunately, the principles of altruism, sense of charity and good will, and desire to do right by others that many of us have been raised with provide opportunities for criminals to take equal advantage of charities and the trusting nature of their donors. The catastrophic result of that combination creates victims of charities and donors alike.

Some crime schemes have roots in the 19th and early 20th centuries. Other scams are a product of our easy access to modern technology and the internet. I can speak from career experience to the challenges and impacts of the breadth of activities criminals can perpetrate on the unsuspecting public with various fraud schemes.

Previously, I was Deputy Director and Officer-in-Charge of what was known as Project Phonebusters in North Bay, Ontario in 1993. At the time, the Ontario Provincial Police (OPP) Anti-Rackets Branch and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) began investigating complaints and entering the victims' information in a central-sourcing national database maintained by the OPP. The original mandate of Phonebusters was to investigate and prosecute key individuals in Ontario and Quebec who were involved in telemarketing fraud. Early on, the Competition Bureau Canada played an important role in assisting with these investigations.

It wasn't long before Phonebusters staff realized the problem was much bigger than originally thought – victims were calling from all over Canada. Many of them were senior citizens who had been repeatedly scammed and were looking for support. As the magnitude of Phonebusters became apparent, a Memorandum of Understanding was signed with the OPP in 2001, making the RCMP a contributing partner. The operational scope continued to grow – you could say in lock step with the criminals– over the course of 19 years to include full participation and support from the Competition Bureau of Canada. The Competition Bureau also has amassed and has access to a wealth of interested and participating third party, private sector commercial stakeholders.

In 2010, Phonebusters was renamed the Canadian Anti-Fraud Centre (CAFC) to reflect the fact that its scope had expanded beyond telemarketing fraud. The CAFC is jointly managed by the RCMP, OPP and the Competition Bureau Canada, and its mandate has expanded to include many versions of Mass Marketing Fraud (MMF) – these frauds are essentially schemes that target many victims at the same time whether by telephone, facsimile, postal mail or the internet. With the Competition Bureau as a partner, the CAFC deals with deceptive marketing practices and with spam issues related to fraud. This is an area where charitable organizations can become victims of crime.

The CAFC remains located in North Bay, the city where it was founded. The Call Centre Unit has 11 full-time call takers who are able to field more than 300 calls each day from citizens reporting frauds. Of those calls, the Centre logs data from more than 25,000 victims each year. The call takers are dedicated, trained anti-fraud specialists who provide advice on the steps that victims should take to recover lost funds and to protect themselves in the future.

Scott Tod
Deputy Commissioner OPP

In 2011 alone, the CAFC received 418 charity complaints by Canadian complainants; of those, 48 were victims with a reported loss of $87,900. Nevertheless, only five per cent of victims actually report the crime to police. Victims often feel embarrassment and shame as a result of being a victim of fraud. Businesses often underreport, or fail to report, fraud to avoid "damage to brand," or to reputation of the business and its leaders.

In recent years, the OPP and its law enforcement partners – most notably the RCMP – have pro-actively sought to educate the public and charities about various aspects of fraud that already take a great toll on donations and the reputations that organizations have worked long and hard to build. Campaigns such as Fraud Prevention Month – held annually in March – are used regularly and repeated by other stakeholders, such as the Canadian Bankers' Association, to educate consumers and business about historic and emerging forms of fraudulent behaviour.

Each year, millions of people are contacted – at the door, by mail, by phone, or by e-mail – by those who use names or causes that are very close to the names of legitimate causes and/or respected charities or beneficiaries. The names are altered just enough to mislead or deceive a target in order to access money as well as personal or financial information. The causes they claim to represent are meant to tug at the heart-strings of unwitting, vulnerable people (often seniors) who become victims.

Donors may feel even more urgency or pressure to donate, if approached at their residence. Those doing the approaching may actually be fraud artists preying on the generous nature referenced previously.

The end of the calendar year is the peak season for charity appeals. It also is the peak season for the bogus charity appeals by criminals who leverage the 'Christmas spirit' to prey upon victims.

Some will use 'high pressure' or threatening telemarketers who want donors to contribute immediately. Others have their agents call and 'thank' people for a pledge they don't remember making. Keep in mind that criminal telemarketers relentlessly hound people – some victims report receiving five or more calls per day, wearing down their resistance. But the personal and financial information or the actual funds gained through that contact – no matter how small the amount – are then used to fund further criminal activities and enterprises. And, once a person has succumbed to this ruthless fraud, their name and number will likely go on a so-called "sucker list", which is sold from one criminal to another.

Bigger 'scores' are more noticeable to law enforcement through banking records and safeguards within the systems of financial institutions to flag these occurrences. Success from the criminals' perspective comes from the percentage of occasions they can successfully replicate the scam for their own illegal gain.

We advise family members and friends not to criticize victims for being naïve for falling prey to a deceptive telemarketer. Instead, we would rather they encourage these individuals to share their concerns about unsolicited calls or any suspicious business or charitable dealings, and ultimately come forward to police. We would also want to assure the victim that it is not rude to hang up on suspicious calls.

There are also many ways to detect whether a relative or friend is being targeted by unscrupulous telemarketers. The warning signs include:

- a marked increase in the amount of mail with too-good-to-be-true offers;
- frequent calls offering get-rich-quick schemes or valuable awards, or numerous calls for donations to unfamiliar charities;
- a sudden inability to pay normal bills;
- requests for loans or cash;
- banking records that show cheques or withdrawals made to unfamiliar companies; and,
- secretive behaviour regarding phone calls.

By nature, Canadians are generous people. We regularly advise would-be donors that committing their hard-earned money to charity should be as safe and secure as it is intended it to be to reach the people or causes they want to help. The OPP and its partners remind donors to be wary and careful before opening their hearts and their wallets to someone representing an unfamiliar charity or special interest. Information and awareness are their best defence against becoming a victim.

Throughout the year, the OPP Anti-Rackets Branch – created in 1960 – recommends that would-be donors consider the following tips when they are approached:

- If donors receive a telephone call, ask for the information to be sent in writing. Donors have the right to check out any caller – in person or over the phone -- by requesting written information, a call back number, references, and time to think over the offer. They may ask how much of their gift will be used directly for the charity or how much will go toward administrative or fund-raising costs.
- Never give out personal or financial information over the phone, or at the door. Donors may wish to make out a cheque payable to the charity. They may wish to mail the cheque later.
- Call the charity. Donors should be able to find out more about the appeal and if it is authorized, and what percentage of their donation the charity will receive. Donors should never feel pressured into making a donation.
- Ask if the charity is registered. Contact Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) at 1-800-267-2384. Ask CRA for the charitable tax number of the charity and any discrepancies should be questioned. As gift planners know, there are tools in the marketplace to help you best advise your clients, such as CharityCAN – www.charitycan.ca.
- At the beginning of each year, decide which charities to support – send cheques directly to their head office, and feel good about giving. If donors are then approached more directly, they may be a bit leery and say they 'have already given', and perhaps they 'will consider the appeal next year when they decide which charities to support'.

We recognize that legitimate charities have nothing to hide and should have no problem providing would-be donors with information. In fact, charities have a definite interest in ensuring 'the bad guys' are out of business. Responsible charities and estate/gift planners can and should do their part to ensure charities' representatives are provided with and carry appropriate identification. They should have detailed information would-be donors may need for each aspect of their operation. – For both parties, the message is clear. If you think a charity or a donor has been a victim of fraud, file a complaint. If you suspect a criminal is at work, file a complaint by calling your local police or contact the Canadian Anti-

Fraud Centre at 1-888-495-8501 or visit <http://www.antifraudcentre-centreantifraude.ca>

It's the best way to ensure the reputations of legitimate charitable organizations and causes – and their supporters – are effectively protected.

SPEND-DOWN FUNDS

Between Endowments and Immediate Gifts

Lauren Storer
Scotia Private Client Group

“I want my charities to be able to swallow my bequest, not choke on it,” said our 82-year-old donor to Aqueduct Foundation. She wished to include three favourite charities as the beneficiaries of the residue of her estate. One is her 100-year-old parish church, one is an arts organization, and one is a local social services agency.

When planning her estate, we discussed outright gifts to the charities and the idea of creating an endowment, but she chose the option of a “spend-down” legacy fund. A spend-down fund functions like an annuity. It distributes all capital and income over a set term – for example, ten years – and then ceases to exist.

Structurally, spend-down funds are between a long-term endowment and an immediate gift. The structure provides the charities with significant, steady support for a defined period with the goal of starting something new, addressing a capital need, or just operating well.

Spend-down funds also provide checks and balances. Our donor had witnessed a protracted debate within the parish – “at times it was a bare-knuckle fight,” she remembered – over the use of a bequest. Rather than restrict the use of her gift, our donor wanted her church and the other two charities to determine their greatest needs on an annual basis. She stipulated that each charity make a short annual proposal to make everyone take the process seriously and to ensure that the funds are well used.

The funds would be held in her fund at Aqueduct Foundation and granted in her name each year. With the option of appointing a successor advisor at Aqueduct Foundation, children or other family members could be involved in this process. Reviewing proposals from the charities and contributing to the conversation would allow the next generation to have a relationship with the charity and participate in the legacy.

Spend-down funds are useful planning structures in a number of philanthropic situations:

1. To plan funds in support of projects dependent on other funding being secured to get off the ground. The spend-down structure ensures money is not released until the charity has met its fundraising target or secured government funds. The gift can be redirected to another charity or project if the original project does not proceed.
2. To support a cause, not a single charity. Some donors are dedicated to a particular project or cause, not a particular charity. A spend-down fund, especially as part of a legacy or bequest, allows them to maintain control and flexibility further into the future. Charities and their programs are always constantly evolving to meet the needs of the sector they support. The flexibility of a spend-down fund allows a donor's gift to also change with the times.

3. To help small charities get large gifts. Spend-down funds are often appreciated by charities because the structure helps them to attract large gifts, such as bequests. Many grassroots charities and smaller organizations do not have the capacity to hold and manage longer-term funds. They do not have investment accounts, specialized financial reporting, disbursement quota tracking or even investment committees. A spend-down fund at Aqueduct Foundation provides confidence that the funds will be invested and managed prudently. The charity is freed from the administrative burden of managing a gift and it can concentrate on its good works.

Finally, spend-down funds are helpful in terms of maximizing the charitable impact of large gifts, while still having a lasting legacy for a family. While the more common endowment fund is an important means of funding for charities, some donors are not interested in the perpetuity of an endowment fund, which protects capital. A spend-down fund can last just long enough to provide consistent support to your favorite charities and have the next generation see or even participate in the benefits.

INCENTIVES TO GIVE

Response to Parliamentary Review

Adam Aptowitzer
Drache Aptowitzer Professional Corporation

A Parliamentary committee is currently investigating charitable donation incentives. The committee invited submissions on charitable donation incentives, and several worthwhile submissions were made.

Understanding the System

Any donation incentive program must have two key elements; understanding and trust. Understanding is fundamental to any incentive, and complexity is itself a disincentive. The less people understand about the benefits they will receive from a particular type of behavior the less likely the reward is to motivate their behaviour.

One suggestion is to eliminate the two-tier donation tax credit. The first $200 of donations in a year are credited differently than the remainder of donations in a year. The difficulties in explaining this to potential donors are such as to act as a disincentive to people interested in the tax effects of small donations.

To counter this disincentive, we suggest the provision of donation tax credits at a single tax rate (the highest). In these times of financial austerity a suggestion that, by implication, results in less tax revenue may require some persuasion.

Currently, it is donations made by the end of the year that are given credit on the tax forms filed for the year. Generally speaking, deadlines are a great time to focus people on the issue at hand. Unfortunately, the end of December is a time when people may be in a sentimental mood to donate but they are not usually educated about the tax aspects of giving.

Let's allow for donations made in the first sixty days of the year to be used against taxes in the previous calendar year – similar to the RRSP system. This has spawned an entire industry that uses the end of February deadline to educate donors about the tax aspects of contributing to RRSPs. By moving the donation deadline date to the same as that for RRSPs to the end of February, charities would have a better opportunity to increase their educational efforts about the system, and donors would be able to make donation decisions with full information about their tax affairs of the previous year.

Trust in the System

The second key element in an incentive program is trust that the money donated will in fact be used for the purposes it is intended. In this context, lack of trust in charity regulation is a disincentive to many.

So, to properly motivate people to give there must be certain elements in place. First, people must feel an affinity with the cause they are being asked to support. As society changes – for instance becoming more secular, or immigrant populations becoming acculturated – the definition of 'charity' must evolve as well to not only meet new societal ills, but also to appeal to new groups of donors.

In the past, we have relied on the Courts to extend the of what constitutes a charity. This process has effectively ground to a halt, and so some action must be taken to reset the definition. The most obvious way to do this, and one which has been done in other jurisdictions, is to legislate a definition of charity appropriate to the times. We have made the suggestion that this is an appropriate way forward for Canada.

However, perhaps the greatest factor in eroding trust in the sector is the bad press that results from a poorly regulated sector. As we have written before, constitutionally, the power to regulate charities is given to the provinces. Because the provinces have effectively abdicated their jurisdiction in this field, the Federal government uses its taxing power to regulate charities – to the extent possible.

Our suggestion is to involve the Provinces in the regulation of charities by creating a joint Federal-Provincial regulator. In this way, regulations could be drafted to address areas of concern to the Regulator, and to Canadians generally, in ways that would ultimately increase the level of trust Canadians have in their charities. As the level of trust in the sector increases, so does the incentive to give.

This would have the added benefit that Parliament, together with the Provinces, could pass nuanced regulations in other areas of concern such as political advocacy, fundraising, and transparency.

Removing the Disincentive to Donating

There is currently a limit on the total donation tax credit that can be used in any year (except the year of death and the year preceding it). The general limit allows a taxpayer to offset the tax owing on up to 75% of taxable income, but over time exceptions to this limitation were made for donation of certain types of assets. The effect is to create a disincentive for the donation of cash in favour of certain capital assets. At this point, the limit has been raised to the point where it is practically meaningless as few people or corporations are in a position to even approach this limit. Nevertheless, as it only serves as a disincentive to giving cash it should be removed. The greatest impact would likely be the indirect promotion of social enterprise.

PROFILE

Passionate Donor to Cancer Research

*Irene Johnson,
Donor*

Irene Johnson has three good reasons to be passionate about the fight against cancer.

In 1995, she lost her father to stomach cancer. A year later, her mother, who had leukemia, passed away. And, eight years ago, her own diagnosis of breast cancer came as a shock.

She is now in good health, due in no small part to the fantastic progress that's being made by Canadian researchers. The treatment she received saved her life.

"Unfortunately, like many people, I know what it is to suffer the loss of loved ones to cancer," Irene says. "I understand, intimately, the courage it takes to fight for your own life, and I've felt the profound gratitude that comes with surviving a brush with death. That's why I've decided to leave a gift to the Cancer Research Society (CRS) in my will."

For 15 years, Irene Johnson has been giving to the CRS, whose sole focus is funding the most promising cancer research. She was drawn to the CRS' willingness to invest in new researchers with innovative ideas.

"These ideas often lead to important breakthroughs that help to increase survival rates and enhance the quality of life for patients," adds Irene. "For example, it used to be that many breast cancer patients, after having surgery, would be left suffering from lymphedema, a side effect that, although not life-threatening, could lead to long-term swelling and discomfort in the arm or hand.

"When I was going through treatment for my breast cancer, I was fortunate to take part in a clinical trial that showed that removing the glands that led most of the time to lymphedema was not always necessary. In turn, that led to what is now much less invasive surgery for breast cancer patients." This is just one example of the important role that research plays in bringing us closer to a cure.

However, despite these advances, there is still so much that needs to be done and that is what inspired Irene Johnson to do more to help vigorously pursue cancer research.

"I hope that in the long term my bequest will support cancer research that will eventually lead to a cure. But in the meantime, I know that researchers will continue to find ways to increase survival rates." Not very long ago, most women diagnosed with breast cancer died. Today, the five-year survival rate is around 88%, thanks to cancer research.

"I want to help give patients and their families a more optimistic future," says Irene. In the last two years alone, the CRS board has approved over $18.5 million in grants to Canadian scientists. These projects have the best potential to make significant progress in basic cancer research and the development of new cancer treatments.

New studies are working to unlock the mysteries of cancer cells, such as those dedicated to strengthening and stimulating the body's natural immune system to fight cancer. The CRS is also funding research into ways to interfere with the invasive properties of cancer cells.

Furthermore, the Cancer Research Society is supporting the training of the next generation of cancer researchers through the funding of fellowships. Our future health rests in the hands of these best and brightest minds in cancer research.

Irene feels very pleased knowing that, through her estate, she will be able to make a contribution to cancer research that is much more significant than she ever could in her lifetime. She hopes that her personal legacy will live on in the lives that are saved by innovative breakthroughs in the causes and treatments of cancer.

Says Irene Johnson: "I know I'm now doing all that I can to help find a cure for cancer!"

NOT-FOR-PROFIT CORPORATIONS

Governing Legislation Modernized

The Canada Not-For-Profit Corporations Act (“CNCA”) received Royal Assent on June 23, 2009 and was proclaimed in force on October 17, 2011. This statute replaces Part II of the Canada Corporations Act (“CCA”). In Ontario, the Not-For-Profit Corporations Act, 2010 (“ONCA”) received Royal Assent on October 25, 2010. It is contemplated that draft regulations will be released in the near future and that the ONCA will be proclaimed in force by the end of 2012. The ONCA replaces the Corporations Act (Ontario) (“OCA”). Both the CNCA and the ONCA herald the modernization of the governance rules for no share capital corporations and provide a regulatory framework similar to for-profit corporations. The following is a brief high level summary of key features of the new statutes.

The Canada Not-for-Profit Corporations Act

Existing federal not-for-profit corporations governed by the CCA will have three years from the date of proclamation (ie until October 14, 2014) to amend their constituting documents to conform with the CNCA and apply for a certificate of continuance to avoid dissolution. The application for continuance must include an officer's certificate certifying that the members have adopted a new bylaw which conforms to the requirements of the CNCA. The CCA will continue to apply to such corporations until they are continued.

Terminology

The CNCA contains a number of unique terms that are relevant to its understanding, including the following:

“soliciting corporation” being a corporation which received in excess of a prescribed amount of $10,000, during a prescribed period of three years, in the form of donations from third parties, grants or financial assistance from the federal, provincial or municipal government or any of their agencies, or donations from other soliciting corporations; and “non-soliciting corporation” being a corporation which is not a soliciting corporation.

The characterization of a federal not-for-profit corporation as either a “soliciting corporation” or a “non-soliciting corporation” has a number of implications, including those relating to the composition of its board; whether the corporation is able to enter into a unanimous member agreement; and the extent of its financial disclosure and financial review requirements. Soliciting corporations will be subject to stricter obligations than non-soliciting corporations.

Incorporation of a corporation will be “as of right” and it will no longer be necessary to submit a draft form of the by-laws with the application. A minimum of one incorporator will be required, either a person or a “body corporate”. There is no requirement

M. Elena Hoffstein,

that the incorporator become a member of the corporation.

There will no longer be a requirement to set out “objects” although if the corporation is a charity, it will likely continue to be desirable to set out the purpose of the corporation in a manner akin to objects in order to demonstrate compliance with the requirements under the Income Tax Act (Canada) that all resources of the charity are expended on its charitable objects. As well, it will no longer be necessary to list the powers of the corporation, although it will be permissible to include them and any others permitted to be set out in the by-laws of the corporation.

A capacity corporation incorporated under the CNCA has the capacity, rights, powers and privileges of a natural person, like corporations incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act (“CBCA”) although the activities it can carry on and powers it can exercise can be restricted by the members.

Pre-incorporation contracts which are contracts entered into by a person on behalf of a corporation before it comes into existence are recognized. The CNCA provides that once the corporation comes into existence, it may adopt such a contract, at which point the corporation is bound by it and the original party is released.

Registered Office

A corporation is required to maintain a registered office in the province specified in its articles unless the articles are amended to specify another province. The directors may change the address of the registered office within that province at any time.

Directors

The CNCA contains many provisions regarding the composition of the board of directors. For soliciting corporations a minimum of three directors is required, at least two of whom are not officers or employees of the corporation or its affiliates. Non-soliciting corporations are only required to have a minimum of one director.

Staggered terms are permitted, but the regulations prescribe a maximum term limit of 4 years, although directors are entitled to continue in office until such time as their successors are elected.

An important change from the CCA is that ex-officio directors are not permitted.

If a quorum of directors is in existence the directors can fill a vacancy but where the “vacancy” results from an increase in the minimum or maximum numbers of directors provided for in the articles or a failure to elect the number or the minimum number of directors specified in the articles, then the directors cannot fill such a vacancy.

The board can elect directors by increasing the fixed number of directors if the articles so provide, within the minimum and maximum number provided for in the articles. A director so elected has a maximum of one year term and no more than 1/3 of the elected directors from the last annual meeting of members can be elected in this manner.

Although the CNCA allows directors to receive reasonable remuneration for their services and indemnification for expenses incurred on behalf of the corporation in their capacity as directors, provincial charity laws may prescribe otherwise.

Meetings of Directors and Members

There are a number of significant changes pertaining to meetings of directors and of members. The following is a brief summary of the more important of these changes:

Directors and members can act by written resolution. However, with respect to members’ meetings, a meeting must take place if the meeting is with respect to the resignation or removal of the directors or accountant where a statement has been submitted giving reasons for opposing or resigning his/her removal;

Directors cannot vote by proxy. However members can if the bylaws so provide;

A quorum for meetings of directors is a majority unless the articles or bylaws otherwise provide. With respect to members’ meetings, a quorum is a majority unless the bylaws so provide; and Teleconference meetings are permitted for both director’s and member’s meetings.

The mechanism of a “unanimous member agreement” is available to members under the CNCA. Through this instrument, all members of a non-soliciting corporation can agree, if they so choose, to restrict the powers of the directors to manage or supervise the activities and affairs of the corporation and take on these responsibilities themselves. To the extent that such an agreement restricts the rights of the directors to manage certain matters, the directors will equally be relieved of liability relating to their performance.

Conflict of Interest

Directors and officers are required to disclose the nature and extent of any interest they have in any material contract or material transaction made or proposed to be made with the corporation and to refrain from voting. The obligation arises not only where the director or officer has an ownership interest in the other party to a transaction or agreement, but also where the director or officer is a director or officer of that other corporation thus expanding the statutory definition of “conflict of interest” to include a conflict in the common law duty of loyalty – an issue increasingly relevant to directors of not-for-profit corporations.

Liability Issues

The CNCA sets out the common law duty of directors and officers to act honestly and in good faith with a view to the best interests of the corporation in the performance of their duties.

Specific potential liabilities of directors are set out in the CNCA, including those relating to a payment or distribution to a member, director or officer contrary to the CNCA; a payment of an indemnity contrary to the CNCA; and debts not exceeding six months’ wages payable to an employee for services performed for the corporation.

As under the CCA, corporations are permitted to indemnify directors and officers for losses suffered as a result of third party actions, but are an improvement over the CCA provisions, as they explicitly apply as well to former directors. In addition these provisions are extended to those acting at the corporation’s request as a director or officer or in a similar capacity of another entity. The CNCA specifically permits corporations to purchase insurance to benefit directors and officers.

The common law due diligence defence is also set out in the CNCA. This defence allows a director to avoid personal liability arising out of his or her duties as a director where he or she acted in accordance with his or her fiduciary duties and exercised the care, skill, and diligence that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances, including where the director relied on professional advisors.

The CNCA codifies the director’s common law dissent rights, which would allow a director to avoid liability arising from the matters approved by the board but which the director did not vote in favour of, by requesting his or her dissent to be recorded in the minutes.

FINANCIAL STABILITY

Change Through Sustainable Funding

*Adam Spence,
MaRS Discovery District*

This morning, a new generation of community leaders awoke to a fundamentally new reality than that of the generation that came before them.

Our climate is changing. Our economy is in the midst of a fundamental transition. The roles of government, civil society, and the private sector are in a state of flux, as are fundamental assumptions of what society values and what society will support, from the arts to the welfare state. The cultural make-up of our country is vastly different due to seismic demographic shifts, and we struggle to bridge a growing socio-economic divide.

The new generation of emerging community leaders meets the day with a powerful, personal motivation to tackle these immensely deep-rooted issues and problems. They desire change with the same passion as the current generation of leaders that stands with us in fields, offices, community centres, and streets across the country.

But passion alone will not ensure success. We cannot achieve the change we seek without money. Alongside these tremendous challenges, we feel pressure to ensure we can keep the lights on, make payroll, and keep our programs running. Our present future looks a bit bleak: less government funding, fewer donations, constraints to earned income, and increased expectations.

How can we work together to develop and deploy the capacity to secure sustainable and diverse sources of financing for operations and growth? Ultimately, stable and secure financing will allow us to achieve the change we seek and ensure the quality of life we desire for the different geographic, cultural, and interest communities we are a part of as advanced citizens.

The pursuit of sustainability for the nonprofit and charitable sector is gut-churning. It ranges from the sublime to the ridiculous: from tree-killing reviews of government grant financing in pursuit of renewal of annual funding to building competitive social enterprise business models within a maze of complex regulations; from months of writing and developing partnerships for new program grant proposals to sleepless nights awaiting the auditor's report. Tens of thousands of charities and nonprofit organizations struggle every day in a hyper-competitive funding environment.

We need to understand our current conditions and challenges and determine what we can do to build long-term financial sustainability for the sector.

By the Numbers: Finances in the Canadian Nonprofit Sector

We know that the nonprofit and charitable sector is a large and remarkably important component of the Canadian economy. Total economic output for the sector, the third largest in Canada, was $106.4 billion in 2008, representing 7.1% of our total economic activity (Statistics Canada, 2010).

The majority of revenues for Canadian nonprofit organizations come from a variety of sources, including earned revenues (45.1%), government spending (20.9%), and contributions from households and businesses (13.3%; Statistics Canada, 2010). The proportion of income derived from earned revenues is a surprising figure. It has grown from 41.6% to 45.1% of total income since 1997; in real numbers, earned income has grown by 135.5% during that same period (Statistics Canada, 2011). We are quickly approaching the status of other nations that are well-recognized for social enterprise activities, such as the United Kingdom, where earned income represents over half (50.3%) of the income of charities (Pharaoh, 2008).

Challenges to Sustainability

Despite our relative size and strength, there are major challenges to our sector's long-term financial sustainability.

CRA GUIDANCE

Jasmine Sweatman,

Increased Scrutiny on Fundraising

Sophia Dunkley,
Sweatman Law Firm

Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) released its much anticipated CRA Fundraising by Registered Charities Guidance, known as CG-013, at the end of April, 2012.

The Guidance <http://www.cra-arc.gc.ca/chrts-gvng/chrts/plcy/cgd/fndrsng-eng.html> has been simplified and provides annexed schedules with examples, descriptions and tools for further reference. There is also more guidance on the calculation of the fundraising expense and revenue ratio the CRA will use to evaluate the fundraising practices and reporting of registered charities.

The Guidance identifies areas of “evidence of unacceptable fundraising.” This will increase CRA scrutiny of registered charities on various fundraising matters, including:

- Fundraising resources being disproportionate to resources devoted to charitable activities;
- Lack of identifiable fundraising use or need;
- Inappropriate fundraising purchases or staffing practices;
- Gross fundraising revenues being paid in large part to contracted third parties;
- Commissioned-based remuneration or payment of fundraisers based on the amount or number of donations received;
- Misrepresentations in fundraising solicitations or a lack of disclosure about fundraising costs, revenues or practices;
- Lack of well documented fundraising initiatives or arrangements; and
- High fundraising expense ratios.

CRA will still take into account case-specific factor such as the size of the organization, limited cause appeals, donor development programs and gaming activities, to name a few, when evaluating acceptable fundraising activities and practices.

The Guidance does not focus on the “substantially all” test and the “four part allocation” test, which were the principle evaluation tools under the previous CRA guidance. Rather, these are tools included in the annexed schedules and forms part of the overall guidance on the reporting expenditures on the T3010.

A registered charity that engages in illegal or unacceptable fundraising activities or practices could be, and likely will now be, subject to sanctions or revocation of its charitable registration.

For charities, a good defence is the best offence. This includes the maintenance of adequate books and records, and the establishment and/or adherence to internal policies regarding fundraising. These will help keep registered charities on side with this new fundraising guidance.

PROFILE

Ken and Jenny Yule, Donors

Vancouver Couple Back Cancer Research and Care

This is a milestone year for Ken and Jenny Yule, retired professionals and parents of two. It was 30 years ago when Jenny was diagnosed with and treated for breast cancer. After discovering a lump in her breast herself, Jenny was sent for a mammogram that later revealed a malignancy and required her to undergo a mastectomy.

Ken and Jenny Yule's children were aged four and seven at the time of Jenny's diagnosis. "The surgeon said he wanted to see us in his office at two o'clock on Friday; it was really terrifying," Ken recalls vividly. "We were looking down the barrel of a gun, and I felt helpless."

Ken started exploring ways to become an active participant in helping to improve cancer treatments.

"Making a donation to the BC Cancer Foundation through an insurance policy on my life was something I could do to help and show a form of support to my wife. It felt wonderful, and it enabled me to make a bigger contribution than the annual donation I had been giving," says Ken.

Many people are unaware of the increased donation they can make to a charity that is important to them by using more creative methods of giving.

Jenny says, "I was then, and continue to this day, to be grateful for the commitment, care and treatment I received. Today we see research benefiting many in both diagnosis and treatment. Yet, others have a form of the disease that requires further research. We want to support cancer research and help ensure that it continues in areas where it's most needed."

Careful planning can result in larger amounts being available to help individuals meet their philanthropic goals and support the thousands of patients diagnosed with cancer each year.

"It's great to pay the premiums each year and see the policy value grow," says Ken, who appreciated the range of payment options available when he donated his life insurance policy. "Because the insurance amounts vary, you can give something that suits you and provide the charity with more than what you may be able to donate at that time," adds Ken.

The Yules know that their gift will accelerate research breakthroughs and gains in cancer knowledge. As the fundraising partner of the BC Cancer Agency and the largest charitable funder of cancer research in the province, the BC Cancer Foundation enables donors to support leading-edge research that has a direct impact on improvements to cancer care for patients in British Columbia and beyond.

Jenny believes that the results of cancer research and medical breakthroughs are cause for celebration. For her and Ken, their planned gift is truly about gratitude.

For each person, deciding what gift is best will depend on individual circumstances and needs. If an individual designates a charity as a beneficiary, but not the owner of a life insurance policy, he or she can make a gift and still maintain control of the policy during his or her lifetime. The donor's estate will receive a tax receipt for the proceeds of the policy to use in the final taxation year.

Says Ken: "If you have cancer, B.C. is the best place in the world to have it. Great research is being done here, and the donations are well spent—you're simply backing a winner."

Take the first step. Request a free Will planner. Help for Today. Hope for Tomorrow...

- Every five minutes someone in Canada develops Alzheimer's disease or a related dementia.
- For every person affected, eight to 10 others are directly impacted.
- The number of Ontarians living with Alzheimer's disease and other dementias has increased 40% in the last 10 years.

By making the decision to include the Alzheimer's Society of Ontario in your Will, you can give Hope for Tomorrow – your bequest could fund:

- Dedicated provincial and national researchers who are tirelessly searching for a breakthrough cure,
- Relieve the pressure on family and friends who devote endless hours of care-giving,
- Educate decision-makers about the need for improved health care services and qualified dementia health care workers,
- Give individuals who suffer from Alzheimer's disease or dementia hope.

Your donation or bequest to the Animal Welfare Foundation of Canada goes farther. We fund direct services and programs for animals in need, and innovative educational and research programs that help animals at the community, provincial and national levels.

AWFC grants and programs are administered by an all volunteer Board of Trustees, composed of veterinarians, animal welfare scientists and other professionals who have broad experience of animal protection in Canada and in the evaluation of grant requests and project outcomes.

Whether you want to help companion, farm, wild or exotic animals, your gift to the AWFC will have many returns. For the animals, and for you.

Les dons ou legs que vous faites à la Fondation du bien-être animal du Canada (FBAC) ont une incidence étendue. En effet, grâce à eux, nous finançons des services et des programmes destinés directement aux animaux dans le besoin ainsi que des programmes de sensibilisation et de recherche novateurs qui aident les animaux à l'échelle communautaire, provinciale et nationale.

Les subventions et programmes de la FBAC sont administrés par un Conseil d'administration formé entièrement de bénévoles comptant des vétérinaires, des scientifiques spécialistes du bien-être animal et d'autres professionnels qui ont une grande expérience de la protection des animaux au Canada ainsi que de l'évaluation de demandes de subventions et de résultats de projets.

Que vous souhaitiez aider des animaux de compagnie, de ferme, sauvages ou exotiques, le don que vous ferez à la FBAC suscitera de nombreux avantages...pour les animaux et pour vous.

"Charity begins at home, but should not end there."

—THOMAS FULLER

Leave your mark on Science

Liz spends everyday in pain. She never leaves home and can't enjoy the life of an average 20 year old. Living with arthritis, she is just one of 4.6 million Canadians hoping for a cure for over 115 forms of arthritis and autoimmune diseases because there are no cures – yet.

The Arthritis Research Foundation's vision is to fund research which will beat arthritis and these chronic diseases.

A planned gift to the Arthritis Research Foundation can put the power of research to work at University Health Network in Toronto and make a positive difference in the lives of those living with these illnesses. And when we beat arthritis, we'll beat rheumatoid arthritis, we'll beat lupus, we'll beat scleroderma, we'll beat ankylosing spondylitis, we'll beat osteoarthritis we'll beat them all.

Character. Service. Leadership.

Invest in the future by making a bequest or planned gift in support of the Loran Awards, the most comprehensive merit scholarship in Canada.

Granted by the Canadian Merit Scholarship Foundation, each Loran Award comprises an annual stipend of $9,000 matched by a tuition waiver up to the same amount, mentorship, and access to summer internship opportunities. The awards are renewable for up to four years of undergraduate study and are tenable at any of 24 Canadian universities. More than 80 one-time awards are also granted annually.

Why choose the Loran Awards?

- We have the most thorough assessment process in the country. We look for breadth in academic and extracurricular interests, commitment to service, integrity, entrepreneurial energy, independence of thought and willingness to take on meaningful risks.
- Loran Awards reach students across Canada — small towns and large urban centres in every province.
- Funding is leveraged through matching tuition waivers from our partner universities. Students are free to choose the best university and program for them in Canada.
- We have a 20-year track record of selecting and supporting the next generation of leaders.
- We have professional management and a distinguished board of directors.

Please contact Kara O'Brien to discuss planning your bequest or other planned gift at 1-866-544-2673, x223.

Thank you for supporting our Canadian missions!

Since 1908, CATHOLIC MISSIONS IN CANADA has helped extend the blessings of the Catholic faith throughout Canada.

Catholic missions are found in every region of Canada where the population is either too small or the economic situation too fragile for the people to support their local church.

In 2013, Catholic Missions In Canada will need $4 million to support our Canadian missions.

Be remembered as the one who gave a child sight.

Twahiri was born with bi-lateral cataracts.

By leaving a gift in your Will to cbm (Christian Blind Mission), you can give a lifetime of sight to children like Twahiri – and potentially thousands of other children like him...

A donkey can live for up to (and often more than) forty years. So you can imagine how your gift be well appreciated – in terms of shelter, food and care – for many many years by the remarkable animals we've rescued. To speak with us about making a bequest, call 519.836.1697 or email info@thedonkeysanctuary.ca. Thanks so much for thinking of us, and the donkeys.

Purpose: Food for the Poor Canada (FFPC) is the Canadian branch of one of the largest charities in the world, which delivers one billion dollars worth of aid each year to countries in the Caribbean and Latin America. FFPC has a great network of local partners and a profound understanding of the markets it works in. Food for the Poor Canada believes in tackling poverty at the cause; FFPC builds sustainable villages for the communities who are receiving basic aid. Homes, schools, community centres, income generating projects, farming and education are delivered to support growth in the community. This combination of basic aid and sustainable development is most effective in empowering people to break the cycle of poverty.

It's a Start

Let's say this charity is listed in the Canadian Donor's Guide, Canada's only comprehensive directory of fundraising organizations . . . a book that goes to an audience specifically selected for their involvement in major donations and planned giving . . . a reference book they use throughout the year as a source of information.

Great exposure. But where's the information? Who are they? What do they do? What have they achieved? Who is the person to contact?

Information please.

Your potential donors need to know.

The Benefits of Integrated Solutions

The most significant charitable gifts are typically part of a Will and estate plan. While not everyone includes charitable giving in their estate plans, for those who do philanthropy is a key priority.

Scotia Private Client Group is a national leader in philanthropic planning and solutions. Our Philanthropy and Estate Services extend to serving as Executor of estates and Trustee of ongoing trusts. Our clients benefit from customized, tax-efficient strategies that align their investment, retirement, philanthropic and estate plans to help ensure financial well-being into the next generation.

Philanthropic Advisory Services

As the largest provider of Philanthropic Advisory Services to private foundations in Canada, we help clients create meaningful legacies. With innovative solutions to facilitate charitable intentions, our specialists can help establish, manage and administer private foundations and donor advised funds. We also provide assistance with planned gifts to individual charities that satisfy personal, tax, and philanthropic goals.

Our focus is on sophisticated and objective planning in support of true philanthropy. Through advice, service and working with independent lawyers, accountants and other professional advisors we deliver strategies that help balance family priorities and support philanthropic goals.

Aqueduct Foundation

Aqueduct Foundation is a registered public foundation (administered by Scotiabank) with donor advised funds. Donor advised funds are personal charitable accounts that enable strategic giving in support of your various charitable interests. Through smart, flexible philanthropic planning, Aqueduct Foundation offers opportunities for tax-effective giving that is integrated into estate plans of varying complexity. Aqueduct Foundation's donor advised fund model offers unrivalled flexibility in the choice of charities and timing of gifts, including gifts of capital.

Aqueduct Foundation is committed to creating personal legacies that provide ongoing support for the donor's favourite charitable causes. Each legacy fund is named and designed to reflect the priorities of the founding individual and/or family. Donors are encouraged to include a short biographical statement to ensure their values and wishes are understood by future generations.

Will and Estate Planning

Where appointed an Executor (Liquidator in Quebec) and/or Trustee under a client's Will we can assist in developing an estate plan aligned with a client's overall goals. We will work with the client's lawyer to create the Will and related documents, such as Powers of Attorney (mandate in Quebec) and trust deeds. We will maintain the documents in safe-keeping and periodically review the plan to help ensure it continues to meet the client's needs.

We administer, settle and manage estates and trusts of varying complexity and value in our capacity as Executor and/or Trustee. In many cases, we work with designated family members to help ensure the estate is administered in a professional and empathetic manner. In addition, we provide financial advice, practical support, and guidance to beneficiaries.

Philanthropy and Estate Services are provided by Scotia Private Client Group in our Centres across Canada.

When discussing a client's philanthropic objectives and strategies, CharityFocus can help guide your conversation.

CharityFocus is a unique portal where organizations connect with their supporters. This site features the financial data for each of Canada's 85,000+ registered charities, and also allows organizations to upload annual reports, program information, financial statements, social media feeds and more! This additional information helps charities tell their story their way, so you don't have to rely on numbers alone.

Help Make Difference With Your Gift!

“Closing the Door on Abuse - Opening the Door to Hope”

A Gift in your will...

Brings hope to the lives of women and children fleeing violence

1 in 4 Canadian women have experienced violence at the hands of a current or past partner (Statistics Canada).

Without support from individuals like yourself Interim Place could not have supported over 38,000 woman and children since our doors opened 30 years ago.

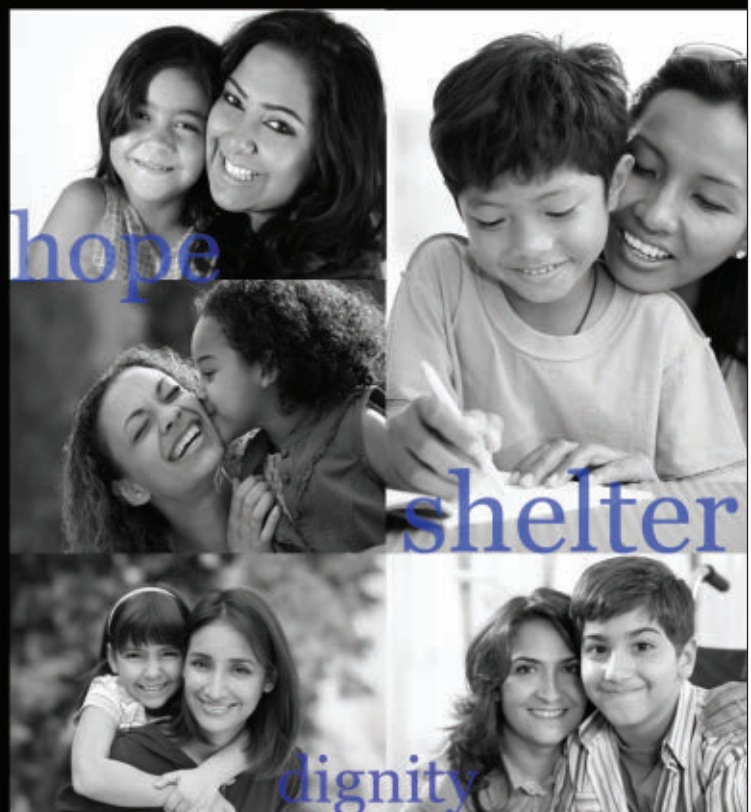

Your gift helps women and children in closing the door on abuse and opening the door to hope.

Purpose: The New Israel Fund of Canada undertakes projects in Israel that strengthen and safeguard civil and human rights, bridge social and economic gaps, and foster tolerance and religious pluralism for all of its citizens. It helps advance the development of Israel as a Jewish and democratic state as envisioned in her Declaration of Independence. For almost 30 years, NIFC has worked with its partner the New Israel Fund helping hundreds of grass-roots Israeli organizations. Its activities have included project funding, capacity building, leadership development and coalition building. In addition, NIFC presents educational events for Canadians to better understand the challenges Israel faces.

Purpose: Founded in 1967, Oolagen works with Toronto youth experiencing difficulties that severely affect their ability to cope or function in school or daily activities. At Oolagen, Listen, Assist, Engage and Empower are the key components of our work. Through listening, we gain understanding; in assisting youth and their families, we help them discover their own skills and knowledge for life, through engaging, we encourage youth to adopt a new, more hopeful view of themselves and their lives; and through this process, we support empowerment. Issues youth face include physical or sexual abuse, family violence, youth gangs, eating disorders, substance abuse, mental illness, anger management, homelessness, pregnancy and death or divorce in the family.

Purpose: The mission of the RMC Foundation is to secure and deliver the funds necessary to Enhance Excellence in the attraction, education and training of the students of the Royal Military Colleges. In Enhancing Excellence it will be our goal to ensure that no opportunity is missed, through lack of funding, to broaden the academic, athletic, leadership and bilingual prowess of the students of the Royal Military Colleges as they prepare to become the future leaders of Canada. As these opportunities to enhance excellence lie outside the Government funded core curriculum and training programs of the Colleges, they can only be provided through private philanthropic financial support.

Le don testamentaire...

gage d'espoir pour les générations prochaines

L'arthrite touche plus de 4 millions de Canadiens, y compris des enfants.

Depuis trois générations, la Société de l'arthrite travaille au mieux-être des personnes arthritiques du Canada.

Grâce à votre généreux appui sous la forme d'un don testamentaire, d'un don d'assurance, d'une rente de bienfaisance, d'un don de valeurs mobilières ou d'une fiducie résiduaire de bienfaisance, vous soutiendrez les générations prochaines dans leur lutte contre l'arthrite.

Votre don signifie de nouvelles découvertes, un espoir pour l'avenir, un traitement curatif.

Pour en savoir plus, téléphonez à votre bureau local de la Société de l'arthrite au 1.800.321.1433 ou visitez notre site Web à l'adresse www.arthrite.ca.

Le don planifié, un don pour l'espoir

Planifier un don en faveur de la Société de recherche sur le cancer c'est poser un geste de générosité en soutenant une cause qui touche chacun d'entre nous.

Un don planifié vous permet d'établir la façon la plus appropriée de donner à la Société de recherche sur le cancer, et ce, sans atténuer votre qualité de vie habituelle et celle de vos proches.

Philanthropic Partnerships Inc.

It Starts with Scouts.

Since 1907, Scouts Canada has been enriching the lives of young people in local communities across Canada. Our Mission is to contribute to the education of young people, through a value system based on the Scout Promise and Law, to help build a better world where people are self-fulfilled as individuals and play a constructive role in society. There are currently 78,064 youth that participate in Scouts Canada programs across Canada in over 2,500 active groups.

Leaving a legacy gift to Scouts can help to fund programs like No One Left Behind. No One Left Behind provides financial subsidies to families who would not normally be able to afford Scouts—ultimately giving more children the opportunity to experience adventure and skill building activities Scouts offers.

Since its inception the No One Left Behind program has helped bring the Scouting experience to over 10,000 children and youth across Canada through the distribution of $700,000.

Please consider a gift today.

For more information regarding leaving a legacy gift to Scouts, contact Caroline Elie, Manager of Individual Giving at celie@scouts.ca or 1-888-855-3336 ext. 297 or go online at www.scouts.ca
