PUBLISHER'S NOTE

Changes Coming

The purpose of the Canadian Donor's Guide remains the same as it always has been: to provide an authoritative annual directory to fundraising organizations in Canada. This year we celebrate the 30th anniversary of the Guide's publication, the last 14 years under the ownership of our family business, Third Sector Publishing, based in Orillia, Ontario.

Scotia Private Client Group is back for a 12th year as the Guide's sponsor. This means we continue to deliver over 17,000 copies of our publication to key decision makers and professional advisors in Canada's donor community.

The Canadian Donor's Guide is also published with the co-operation of the Canadian Association of Gift Planners (CAGP), the Canadian Bar Association, and Imagine Canada. We are grateful for the support of the above, as well as for the support of the numerous charities across Canada that pay for descriptive listings or display advertising. Together, they make it possible to publish the Canadian Donor's Guide.

Thank you.

We continue to feature an expanded Editorial Section. We also offer a Digital Edition of the Canadian Donor's Guide 2015-16. This is an exact replica of the print version of the Guide that you have in front of you. You view it on a computer screen by accessing it on the Internet via our website at www.donorsguide.ca.

We feature a strong lineup of contributors to this year's Editorial Section, as we have for a number of years. Significant measures introduced in the 2014 and 2015 federal budgets make their insights particularly important this year. The 2014 budget brought in the Graduated Rate Estate (GRE). The GRE is a major change to the tax treatment of charitable gifts that are donated via an estate following the death of the donor. The GRE, which takes effect starting in 2016, is causing concern among some members of Canada's gift planning community.

The Editorial Section features three thoughtful articles about the GRE. Senior lawyer Elena Hoffstein provides an overview of the legislation, beginning on page 18. An experienced Planned Giving Officer, Doug Puffer, gives us a case study, illustrating what he feels will be detrimental consequences of the GRE, on page 20. Malcolm Burrows, Head, Philanthropic Advisory Services, Scotia Private Client Group, advises all to take a deep breath on page 22.

The 2015 budget announced some features that are being welcomed by gift planners. The first is the exemption from capital gains tax of gifts to charities of private company shares and real estate under certain conditions. Malcolm Burrows explains on page 28. The second is a more flexible approach for charities to invest in limited partnerships. Lawyer Amanda Stacey provides the details on page 25.

Charity law in Canada is complex, largely because the regulation of charities has, over time, become entwined in this country's voluminous Income Tax Act. It is quite understandable to assume no elected Member of Parliament, or a provincial assembly, unless he or she was a tax expert before entering politics, grasps the complexities of the Income Tax Act; and therefore understands the constraints faced by registered charities and other non-profit organizations.

There continue to be well-founded pleas for reform of the legislative framework that hems in the work of charities and other non-profit entities in Canada. Why does Canada have to lag in this regard? Canadians do often require a nudge. One thought: something that is sometimes necessary in Canada to affect substantial change – a Royal Commission on the Reform of Charity Regulation in Canada.

Nevertheless, it is important to recognize that Canadian charities and their donors enjoy a more generous tax treatment system than what is found in many other first-world countries. Helping us once again to understand these tax benefits, and to unravel some of the mystery of our tax code as it relates to charitable giving, is Jim Parks, a senior lawyer in the field; his Summary of Tax Considerations begins on page 9.

Scotia Private Client Group's Lauren Storer gives us Three Tips for Estates in her Charity Checklist on page 8. Mark Blumberg compares the Ontario Not-for-Profit Corporations Act and Canada Not-for-profit Corporations Act on page 23.

It is always inspiring to read about individuals who benefit from or contribute in a meaningful way to charity. This edition we have three Profiles, provided by Carleton University, The Salvation Army, and Vancouver Foundation. The common thread that runs through all three: meaningful contributions are the result of lives lived with a meaningful sense of purpose.

CHARITY CHECKLIST

Three Tips for Estates

Naming one or more charities as part of your estate plan is often as simple as that: getting the charity name correct in the will. But there is more to planning a gift by will than being accurate about the name. Here are three tips to help you plan better estate donations.

1. Check out the charity online

All registered charities must make annual information filings to Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) – the T3010 form -- and this information is made public. If you are planning to make a significant gift in your will to one or more charities basic due diligence about the charities' finances is helpful.

The T3010 contains basic financial information such as revenue (including annual donations), expenditures (programs, administration, fundraising, grants, etc.), investments, liabilities, program descriptions, board of directors, top salaries, and even the recipients and amounts of grants to other charities. This annual filing is posted on the CRA website, which can be found by searching "CRA charities" in any search engine.

CRA provides annual reports with a single year of data, so it is difficult to see trending information for the charity. For example, are they growing or shrinking? Increasing expenses or cutting back on programs? The free online database Charity Focus provides some trending information, as well as related resources provided by the charity. The resource I most often use is CharityCAN. CharityCAN provides five-year reports and comparative data against peer organizations.

Finally, many charities have websites.

The better websites contain annual reports and audited financial statements. Depending upon your own standard of due diligence, these documents can be very revealing about the culture, health and effectiveness of the charity.

2. Speak to your charities

Donors are often reluctant to speak to charities about their estate donation intentions. They worry about privacy, making an irrevocable commitment, and unwanted fundraising. In the case of significant estate donations, we recommend speaking to the charity either by phone or in person. This is especially true if your intended donation has a restricted purpose.

Ask about how bequests are used, what kind of accountability is provided to donors (i.e. annual report, donation reports), options to recognize a loved one or yourself, indicators of charitable effectiveness and privacy policy. Don't be afraid to ask a few tough questions to ensure your trust in the organization is well grounded. With large estate donations, we always say: "Trust should be earned, not assumed."

If you do not feel comfortable speaking to the charity, ask your lawyer or another advisor to assist. As part of the estate planning process at Scotiatrust this is a standard step. It is a service we provide through Aqeduct Foundation, which has personal legacy foundations.

3. Review your will due to the new estate donations rules

As of 2016, the tax treatment of gifts by will and direct designation gifts of RRSP/RRIFs, TFSAs and life insurance will change. Under the new rules the charity will issue a tax receipt for the donation based on value at date of transfer. If the transfer occurs within 36 months after death, a period known as the "graduated rate estate", the tax credit can be claimed over a period of five years, which is an increase from the current two-year window.

Lauren Storer
Scotia Private Client Group

The five years are: 1) the taxation year of the estate in which the donation is made; 2) an earlier taxation year of the estate; and 3) the final two lifetime tax returns of the deceased against up to 100 percent of the income recorded on each of those tax returns. Previously, the donation was valued at date of death, and there was no 36-month deadline to transfer the property.

The good news is that estate donations that are large relative to income will, in many cases, be eligible for more tax savings. There are, however, some concerns. Novice executors may miss the distribution deadline and lose tax benefits. Estates with illiquid property, such as private company shares or real estate, may find the 36-month deadline to be challenging. There is also risk due to delays caused by litigation.

At Aqeduct Foundation, we use personal foundations to manage estate donations. Aqeduct can reduce the loss of tax benefits with large and complex estate donations by accepting property in kind, rather than waiting for cash. The goal is to ensure your charities receive the intended gift and for your estate to receive the maximum tax savings.

CHARITABLE DONATIONS

A Summary of Tax Considerations

OVERVIEW

Tax consequences are an important factor in structuring charitable gifts. Proper planning can increase the benefits to the donor, which are often a major incentive for charitable giving. A gift to a registered charity by an individual (including a trust) entitles the donor to a deduction in computing tax otherwise payable, whereas a gift by a corporation entitles it to a deduction in computing taxable income, as opposed to a tax credit. These rules are found in section 118.1 of the Income Tax Act (the “ITA”) for gifts by individuals and section 110.1 of the ITA for gifts by corporations.

2015 BUDGET PROPOSALS

The April 21, 2015 federal budget proposes several changes dealing with charitable donations as follows:

1. For dispositions after 2016, where a taxpayer disposes of real estate or shares of a private company, any realized capital gain will not be taxable, to the extent that “cash proceeds” from the sale are donated to a qualified donee within 30 days after the disposition and the disposition was made to a person dealing at arm’s length with both the taxpayer and the qualified donee. The exempt portion of the capital gain will be based on the portion of the sale proceeds donated compared to the total proceeds.
2. Under current law, a charity is regarded as carrying on a business if it is a member of a partnership. Private foundations cannot carry on any business and charitable organizations and public foundations can only carry on a “related” business. A registered charity will not be considered to be carrying on a business solely because it acquires or holds an interest in a limited partnership, if the charity and non-arm’s length entities together hold no more than 20% of the interests in that partnership and the charity deals at arm’s length with each general partner of the partnership. Similar changes will be made for other qualified donees including registered Canadian amateur athletic associations (“RCAAs”). The “excess business holdings” rules will continue to apply to investments in corporations through limited partnerships by private foundations. The rules dealing with “non-qualifying securities” and the “loan back” rules, will also apply to interests in limited partnerships. These rules will be effective for investments in limited partnerships made or acquired on or after April 21, 2015.

3. The rules that permit CRA to treat certain foreign organizations as qualified donees will be extended to all foreign charities. This will enable foreign organizations that are not necessarily “charitable organizations” for purposes of the ITA to apply to be treated as qualified donees.

BASIC TAX RULES

Individuals

An individual donor can claim a credit against tax otherwise payable. This summary comments on charities that are registered by Canada Revenue Agency (“CRA”), RCAAs, certain non-profit housing corporations, Canadian municipalities, the crown, the United Nations and certain foreign charities (including certain foreign universities) and other donees. Credits or deductions are available only for gifts to “qualified donees”, except as noted. The federal tax credit is calculated at the lowest personal tax rate of up to $200. For gifts exceeding $200, the credit is 29% of the amount of the gift. A comparable tax credit is available in calculating provincial taxes, with special rules in Quebec. An individual can claim credit for gifts of up to 75% of net income for the year. Unused credits can be carried forward for five years and used to offset tax in those years, subject to the 75% limit. The limit does not apply in the year of death or the previous year. The 75% limit is increased by 25% of taxable capital gains realized making a gift of appreciated capital property, and 25% of recaptured capital cost allowance on a gift of depreciable property (to a maximum of 25% of the lesser of the capital cost or the fair market value of the property).

Corporations

A corporate donor can claim a deduction in computing taxable income, and is subject to the 75% limit noted above for individuals. It can claim a deduction of up to 75% of its net income for the year plus 25% of a taxable capital gain and 25% of recaptured capital cost allowance on a gift of depreciable property (to the same maximum mentioned above).

TYPES OF GIFTS

The following are some basic features and tax consequences of certain types of gifts.

1. Gifts by Will

Gifts can be made by will, as “testamentary” gifts. The donor (“testator”) states in a will that on death, property is to be given as a bequest or legacy to a named charity or a charity to be chosen by the executors. The gift can be cash or property, such as a work of art or shares. If the testator leaves too much discretion to the executors in choosing a charity or the amount of the gift, CRA could allege the gift is made by the estate and not deemed to be made in the year of death.

Under the 2014 federal budget changes, gifts made by will for deaths after 2015 are deemed to be made by the estate rather than by the deceased in the year of death. The estate can elect to claim the credit in the year of death or the preceding year. The transfer of property must be completed within 36 months after death. For deaths before 2016, the testator is deemed to have made the gift immediately before death and a tax credit is available in the terminal return. Unused credits can be carried back and used to reduce tax in the prior year. The credit can offset 100% of net income for the year of death and the prior year. This credit can be useful in calculating tax in the year of death, since the deceased is deemed to have disposed of capital assets immediately before death (subject to certain exceptions, such as for spousal rollovers) at fair market value, realizing capital gains in that year.

The 2014 changes also affect the rules for gifts made by will or by direct designation in RRSPs, RRIIFs, TFSAs and life insurance policies.

2. Annuities

Charitable organizations can issue annuities, but charitable foundations can be deregistered if they incur ineligible debt obligations. A charity should ensure that it has legal authority to issue annuities under provincial law dealing with insurance or other relevant laws. The charity can purchase an annuity from a financial institution rather than issuing it itself, to reduce its risk of loss. The value of property received from a charity in exchange for a gift must be determined and becomes the cost of the property to the charity. Where an amount is transferred to a charity and the donor receives a stream of annuity payments, the amount of the gift will be equal to the excess of the amount transferred by the donor over the amount that would be required to purchase an annuity providing the same payments.

3. Life Insurance

A charity can benefit from gifts of life insurance policies in several ways. A gift of an insurance policy can result in a large donation, at a relatively small cost to the donor. A charity can purchase an insurance policy on the donor's life on the understanding that the donor (or some other person) will pay the premiums directly to the insurance company. This is often supported by a pledge to pay the premiums. The charity can issue a tax receipt for the premiums paid. On the death of the donor, the charity will receive the death benefit, which will not be a gift by the donor. A drawback from the charity's point of view is that there may be no assurance the donor will pay the premiums. If the donor fails to pay, the charity can surrender the policy or pay the premiums using its own funds.

Alternatively, the donor can transfer an existing policy to the charity and agree to pay future premiums. The charity can issue a receipt for the fair market value of the policy, which may be the cash surrender value (normally only whole life or universal life policies will have a value) less any outstanding policy loans. The charity can issue a tax receipt for premiums paid. The donor may have to report income based on the fair market value of the policy, which is based on all of the relevant factors. If a qualified valuator determines that the fair market value of the policy exceeds its cash surrender value (less any outstanding policy loans), the higher amount should be the eligible amount in the receipt issued by the charity. The donor will be subject to tax on the amount by which the cash surrender value (less any outstanding policy loans) exceeds the adjusted cost basis (a defined term) of the policy. CRA has stated that this is not affected by the issuance of an official receipt by the charity reflecting a fair market value that is higher than the cash surrender value.

If the charity is concerned that it will not be able to pay the premiums, the donor (or another donor) can give cash, which the charity can use to buy an annuity providing periodic payments to fund the premiums. The charity should be able to treat the annuity and policy in a way that does not cause problems in meeting its disbursement quota. Alternatively, the charity could rely on a promise from the donor (or another donor) to make annual gifts to pay the premiums. The ability to pay the premiums on a donated policy could be a factor in determining the fair market value of the policy. If the policy is likely to lapse because the charity does not pay the premiums, the fair market value could be reduced. A registered charity is not required to pay tax on its income and should not be adversely affected if a policy is not “exempt”. The eligible amount of a gift of a life insurance policy will be the lesser of its fair market value and the “cost” of the policy to the donor, if the gift is made within three years after the donor acquired it.

The donor can continue to own the policy, and name the charity as the beneficiary. The donor will receive no tax relief for the premiums paid or the value of the policy, since no property is being given to the charity. Under insurance law, the donor can change the beneficiary from the charity to another person. If the charity is the named beneficiary, it will receive the death benefit on the donor's death. The donor is deemed to have made a gift to the charity immediately before death, if the charity receives the death benefit under the policy within 36 months after death. The fair market value of the gift is deemed to be the fair market value, at the time of the individual's death, of the right to that transfer. The Department of Finance has stated that “in nearly all cases” the fair market value at death of the right to transfer is “expected to be” the fair market value at death of the money that is ultimately received. A donor can use life insurance proceeds to pay a bequest in a will, naming the estate as beneficiary. On the donor's death, the estate would receive the death benefit free of tax and pay the bequest to the charity, which would issue a receipt. The credit could reduce tax in the year of death or the prior year, if there are excess credits. In some provinces, probate tax on the value of the proceeds passing through the estate may be a factor. The 2014 changes will affect how these gifts will be treated. Where life insurance proceeds are paid to an estate and used to pay a bequest, the gift will be treated as a gift by the estate, subject to an election to carry it back to the year of death.

Other arrangements may be tax-effective, such as having a private corporation purchase insurance on the life of one of the shareholders. There are techniques to take advantage of the tax-free proceeds on death, the capital dividend account of the corporation, the rules for taxation of dividends and “post-mortem” planning. Subject to a spousal rollover, capital gains are realized in the year of death. In some cases there can be “double tax” because the deceased owns shares of a corporation that owns assets with unrealized gains. Life insurance can often be used to reduce those gains or the tax, in combination with charitable donations.

In some situations, the features of the policy are shared or ownership of the policy is split. This type of planning raises a number of regulatory and tax issues and requires sophisticated advice for both the donor and the charity. Recent changes prevent arrangements designed to deduct interest on money borrowed by private corporations to buy life insurance policies and use the capital dividend account when the death benefit is paid. It also changed the treatment of some back-to-back arrangements and prescribed life annuities.

4. Gifts of Residual Interests

A donor can give property to a charity, while retaining the right to use it for his or her lifetime. Alternatively, the donor can establish a charitable remainder trust by transferring assets to the trust, reserving a right to receive payments for life and transferring the balance in the trust on death to a charity. If certain conditions are met, CRA considers the donor has made a current gift. This type of gift could be made during a person's lifetime or by will. The 2014 changes affect testamentary gifts of the residual interest in an estate. The value of the gift will be the fair market value of the transferred property (usually cash) less the present value of the reserved interest, taking into account an appropriate discount rate, the life expectancy of the donor, current interest rates and any other relevant factors. This type of gift is analogous to a charitable annuity. If there is a right to encroach on the capital, the value of the residual interest is considered to be nil. A trust will generally be required for gifts of property other than real estate.

CRA has stated that the gift of a beneficial interest in the capital of a charitable remainder trust is not automatically treated as a gift of a non-qualifying security, but the general anti-avoidance rule might apply if the trust owns non-qualifying securities. CRA will consider whether the trust is "affiliated" with the donor immediately after the gift was made. If the donor retains a beneficial interest in the income of the trust, the donor may be "affiliated" with the trust. Whether this is the case will be a question of fact. A trust and a person are affiliated if the person is a "majority-interest beneficiary". This includes a person who has a beneficial interest in the income of the trust if it has a fair market value that is greater than 50% of the fair market value of all beneficial interests and a person who, with an affiliated person, holds beneficial interests in the income of the trust if the fair market value of those interests is greater than 50% of the fair market value of all beneficial interests.

Using a charitable remainder trust or making a gift of a residual interest by will often involves reliance on administrative policies of CRA and raises a number of technical issues. The Department of Finance had considered changes in the ITA dealing with charitable remainder trusts, but no amendments have been introduced. Specific advice should be sought before this type of planning is utilized.

5. Gifts of Capital Property

A donor of capital property is deemed to have received proceeds of disposition equal to the fair market value of the property. If the fair market value exceeds the cost, a capital gain will be realized. If the property is depreciable property, recaptured capital cost allowance is included in income. A donor can reduce capital gains tax on a gift of appreciated capital property to a charity by designating the transfer price as an amount not greater than its fair market value and not less than its adjusted cost base. The donor will then be deemed to have disposed of the property for the designated amount and considered to have made a gift of the designated amount when calculating the tax credit or deduction. This enables the donor to avoid realizing a capital gain altogether, or realize only a desired amount of capital gain (for example to offset capital losses). There are restrictions for non-resident individuals disposing of Canadian real estate to a charity.

The amount to be included as a taxable capital gain is nil for gifts of securities traded on a designated stock exchange (such as shares, bonds, warrants and debentures) and mutual fund shares or units or shares or interests in certain segregated funds. It is more tax-efficient for the donor to give securities directly to a charity, rather than sell them and give the proceeds to it.

An employee who exercises a stock option is taxed on a benefit equal to the difference between the fair market value of the shares at the time of exercise and the sum of the exercise price plus the amount paid for the option. In certain circumstances, the employee can claim a deduction against the stock option benefit so only 50% of the benefit is taxable. If an employee stock option is exercised and marketable securities are given to a qualified donee in the year and within 30 days after the option is exercised and if certain other conditions are met, only one-quarter of the benefit is taxable. Individuals who make qualifying donations of marketable securities acquired through such stock options are not required to report any of the benefit.

Taxpayers who own eligible unlisted exchangeable securities can exchange them without causing tax to be payable on a gain. There is no tax on a gain on the exchange, and the donor can receive a receipt for the donation of the listed securities received on the exchange, without recognizing a gain. This beneficial treatment for capital gains on gifts of marketable securities applies to capital gains on the exchange (with some exceptions) of unlisted securities for listed securities where:

- (a) at the time they were issued, the unlisted securities included a condition allowing the holder to exchange them for the listed securities;
- (b) the listed securities are the only consideration received on the exchange; and
- (c) the listed securities are donated within 30 days after the exchange.

There are special rules for exchangeable partnership interests. These are intended to ensure that gains attributable to a reduction in the adjusted cost base of the partnership interest are not exempt.

A gift of a "non-qualifying security" to a charity will be ignored in determining the tax deduction or credit in most cases. A non-qualifying security generally includes an obligation of the donor or a non-arm's length person, a share issued by a corporation with which the donor does not deal at arm's length or any other security issued by the individual or a non-arm's length person. There are exceptions for obligations, shares or securities listed on designated stock exchanges and deposits with financial institutions. If the property is disposed of within five years of receipt of the gift, or ceases to be a "non-qualifying security" within the five year period, the person will be treated as having made a gift at that time. This rule does not apply to an "excepted gift", which is generally a gift to an arm's length qualified donee that is not a private foundation, if the donor deals at arm's length with all of the donee's directors or trustees immediately after the gift. The objective of these rules is to deny a tax credit for certain types of gifts, including shares of privately held companies, subject to some relief if the donee disposes of the security within five years. The rules apply where the non-qualifying security is donated to a trust of which the registered charity is a beneficiary.

Rules dealing with “loan-back” arrangements apply where a person donates property to a charity which is not dealing at arm’s length with the person and receives a loan from the charity, or is allowed to use the property donated to the charity. The fair market value of the gift is reduced for purposes of calculating the tax credit. These rules apply to certain arm’s length arrangements. CRA’s administrative positions on gifts of capital property are set out on its website.

Recognition of a gift is deferred until the time (within five years after the donation) when the qualified donee has disposed of the non-qualifying security for consideration that is not, to any person, another non-qualifying security. An anti-avoidance rule provides that, if as a result of a series of transactions, a particular person holds a non-qualifying security of a donor and the donee has acquired a non-qualifying security of that person or of the donor, the gift will be deferred until such time (within five years of the donation) as the donee disposes of the non-qualifying security for consideration that is not another non-qualifying security of any person.

The courts have treated payments involving leveraged loans as investments rather than gifts, where a significant benefit flowed to the taxpayer. The CRA website contains information about potential problems for donors dealing with tax shelters and other arrangements that depend on official receipts issued for more than a cash payment made with no strings attached. CRA has said it will challenge arrangements that seem to be “too good to be true”, particularly where the donor does not just pay cash or transfer property, but is involved in a more complex arrangement with a charity, a promoter or others.

CRA has stated that where an individual owns “thin” controlling voting shares of a private corporation, under which she is not entitled to receive dividends or to participate beyond a nominal amount on winding up, but controls the corporation, in some circumstances it will treat the shares as having more than a nominal value. A gift of those shares to a registered charity could offer flexibility in dealing with the valuation issue, particularly if an election is made to treat the amount of the gift as the adjusted cost base of the shares. However, this could raise other issues, including problems under the excess business holdings rules for private foundations and “acquisition of control” issues for charitable foundations.

Unlike the rules which permit a donor to avoid recognition of a capital gain when donating marketable securities, the 2015 budget proposals will require the donor to dispose of shares of a private company or real estate and then donate the “cash proceeds”. This is intended to insure that the charity is not required to “monetize” the value of property. For marketable securities, it is generally fairly easy way for the charity to dispose of the securities for cash. This is not the case with shares of private companies or real estate. The proposals will avoid valuation issues. The charity will receive cash and issue an official receipt for the eligible amount of the gift. Valuation will be the responsibility of the donor, who will be required to dispose of the property in an arm’s length transaction, subject to anti-avoidance rules.

In some cases, real estate will consist of land and depreciable property, such as a building. There will likely be recaptured capital cost allowance in many cases, requiring the donor to include in income the amount previously claimed on cumulative basis, to shelter income in previous years. The proposals dealing with interests in limited partnership should be helpful for charitable organizations and public foundations that can carry on a related business. They will be less helpful for private foundations, which cannot carry on any business and are subject to the excess business holdings rules.

6. Gifts of Art, Cultural and Ecological Property

(i) Art

Certain gifts of inventory by an artist receive special treatment. In those circumstances, where an appropriate designation is made, an artist is entitled to a credit based on the fair market value of the property but no income is triggered on the disposition.

Artwork is generally considered to be personal-use property unless it is inventory. Personal-use property is property that is used primarily for the personal use or enjoyment and includes jewellery, clothing, furniture, and certain works of art. For purposes of calculating the capital gain or loss, the adjusted cost base and proceeds of disposition of personal-use property are deemed to be at least $1,000. This rule eases the compliance and administrative burden associated with the reporting of dispositions of personal-use property. The $1,000 deemed adjusted cost base and deemed proceeds of disposition for personal-use property will not apply if the property is acquired after February 27, 2000, as part of an arrangement in which the property is given to a charity. Therefore, where this type of property with a value of less than $1,000 is donated to a charity in those circumstances, it will no longer be treated as personal-use property, and any resulting capital gain will be taxable.

(ii) Cultural Property

A gift of certified cultural property to a designated institution will not trigger a capital gain. The donor will be allowed a credit (if an individual) or a deduction (if a corporation) for the fair market value of the property and will not be limited to 75% of income. There are special rules for determining the fair market value of cultural property. In addition, any capital gain on an object that is donated is exempt from tax. The determination is made by the Canadian Cultural Property Export Review Board and there are extensive rules for the procedures to be followed and appeals if the amount determined is not acceptable to the donor. The Board must certify the property and designate the institution. Any unused credits or deductions can be carried forward for five years, or back one year in the event of death. Charities receiving gifts of cultural property are subject to a penalty tax in certain circumstances if they dispose of the gifted property within ten years of its receipt. If the gift is part of a “tax shelter gifting arrangement”, the donor cannot use a value for the property in excess of the cost amount.

(iii) Ecological Property

There are similar rules for gifts of ecologically sensitive property to the crown, a municipality or a charity that is approved for the conservation and protection of the environment. There are incentives for owners of ecologically sensitive land to protect that land while at the same time qualifying for a tax benefit. The precise nature of the conveyance of property will depend on legal issues and in some cases there may be split ownership.

There are special rules for valuing gifts of ecological property. These include gifts of the land itself and gifts of easements over the land. The use of easements provides some flexibility, permitting the owner to retain legal title while fettering its future use and preventing development, but this can raise difficult valuation issues in some cases. The fair market value will be determined by the Minister of the Environment and there are extensive rules for the procedures to be followed and appeals if the amount determined is not acceptable to the donor. As in the case of gifts of cultural property, a charity accepting a gift is subject to a penalty if it disposes of the property within ten years or changes its use without the consent of the Minister of the Environment. Under the Ecological Gifts Program, Environment Canada certifies that land is ecologically sensitive and an expert panel certifies the value.

Deductions or credits for gifts of ecologically sensitive land or interests in that land are available for carry-forward for 10 years, rather than the usual five years.

7. Gifts of Inventory

Unlike gifts of capital property, gifts of inventory do not permit the donor to choose an amount between the cost of the property and its fair market value. As a result, a gift of property that is part of the inventory of a business will result in an income inclusion. While there will be a corresponding eligible amount for the gift (the eligible amount will depend on whether any advantage is received by the donor), it is frequently less advantageous to donate inventory rather than capital property. This is one of the reasons why special rules were enacted for gifts of inventory made by artists, as discussed above.

Corporations can claim a deduction for gifts of medicine held in inventory to a registered charity, if the charity has received financial assistance from CIDA and uses the medicine in carrying out its foreign activities. For gifts made on or after July 1, 2008, the medicine must have been available to be used by the charity at least six months prior to its expiration date and must qualify as a drug (within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act) which meets certain technical requirements. In addition, a prescribed return must be filed and the charity must in the opinion of the Minister of International Cooperation meet certain conditions prescribed by regulation. This limits the situations in which corporations can claim tax relief for donations of medicine from inventory.

8. Gifts to the Crown

A gift to Her Majesty in right of Canada or Her Majesty in right of a Province (a “crown gift”) is subject to the same income limitation as other gifts, i.e. 75% of the donor’s income for the year plus 25% of any taxable capital gain, plus an amount equal to 25% of recapture of previously claimed capital cost allowance. Consequently, crown gifts provide the same tax relief as gifts to other qualified donees. The crown will include an agent of the crown, and gifts to the museums listed in the Museums Act (including, for instance, the National Gallery of Canada, the Canadian Museum of Civilization, the Canadian Museum for Human Rights and the Canadian Museum of Nature) are treated as gifts to the crown.

9. Charitable Donations of RRSPs, RRIFs and TFSAs

Donations made as a consequence of a direct designation of proceeds of RRSPs, RRIFs or TFSAs to a charity on the death of an individual qualify as gifts eligible for the individual donation tax credit, if the transfer of funds from RRSPs or RRIFs to the charity occurs within 36 months of death. The fair market value of the gift is deemed to be the fair market value, at the time of the individual’s death, of the right to the transfer. Since the balance in an RRSP or RRIF is treated as income in the year of death, in the absence of a rollover to a spouse, the credit for a gift to charity in the year of death will effectively eliminate the tax otherwise payable on the balance, if there is a direct designation and an election to carrying it back. This is the same result as if there were a bequest by will of the amount included in income under the RRSP or RRIF, without having to determine the amount in advance. A direct designation of a charity will be treated as a donation.

Under the 2014 changes, gifts by will and by direct designation in RRSPs, RRIFs and TFSAs and in insurance policies are affected. The gift will be treated as a gift made by the estate, which provides more flexibility. If the deduction or credit is more than can be used in the year of death or the year prior to death, the estate can carry the balance forward under the usual rules. The 2014 changes introduced the concept of a graduated rate estate (“GRE”). Gifts made by will and by direct designation of insurance policies, RRSPs, RRIFs and TFSAs are deemed to have been made when the property is actually transferred by the GRE to the charity and the estate can choose to carry back all or part of that donation. Several problems have been identified. The estate may not be able to complete the transfer within 36 months as a result of delays beyond its control, such as litigation. It is unclear how the rules will apply where there are intervening life interests created by will or in the case of charitable remainder trusts. There are technical concerns that the new rules may limit the ability of the estate to avoid recognition of gains on gifts of ecologically sensitive property, cultural property and publicly traded securities. These and other concerns are discussed below.

10. Miscellaneous Issues

(i) Social Media

Social media have become relevant in some donation arrangements. Some charities raise small amounts by way of text messages. Where donors are not concerned about receipts, this can be an effective way to raise money in small amounts from a wide range of donors. Similarly, “crowdfunding” techniques might be useful for some charities. If a charity engages in a concerted effort to raise money through crowdfunding, it might be regarded as carrying on a business. A charity that carries on business is subject to revocation of registration unless (in the case of a charitable organization or public foundation), the business is “related” to its charitable purposes. One registered charity facilitates the receipt of donations by way of text messages and other electronic means. Another organization enables charities to use crowdfunding and provides access to a broad range of donors, on the theory that they will give small amounts. The donors receive an official receipt, which may be important to the donor. These arrangements do not seem to cross the line and cause the charity to be carrying on a business, but simply constitute another form of fundraising.

(ii) Dividends After Death

When an individual dies, the executors can file a separate tax return reporting any “rights or things” owned by the deceased that have been transferred to a beneficiary, such as a dividend declared by a corporation but not received at the date of death. When an election is made, the amount received is income of the beneficiary. This often occurs where shares are transferred by will and the recipient is “beneficially interested” in the estate. If a corporation has declared but not paid a dividend prior to the death and the shares are transferred to a charity under the will, the dividend will not be subject to tax when received by the charity. If a dividend is declared and received by the estate after death, that dividend could be taxed in the estate, even if the shares are transferred to the charity. If the shares are transferred to the charity and the dividend is declared and paid after the transfer, the dividend will not be subject to tax in the hands of the charity. A number of factors are often relevant in dealing with private corporation shares, death and charitable donations.

(iii) Canada/U.S. Issues

Under the Canada-United States Income Tax Convention (the “Treaty”), Canadian residents are entitled to relief for gifts made to eligible U.S. organizations, subject to 75% of income for the year from U.S. sources. There are rules without that limit for gifts made to a university or college at which the donor or a family member was a student.

The U.S. organization is not a “qualified donee”, as defined in the ITA. CRA has taken the position that a Canadian registered charity cannot treat such a gift as a gift to a qualified donee. Registered charities cannot make gifts other than in the course of carrying out their charitable activities to anyone other than a qualified donee. This is often a factor in the plans for donors who wish to assist Canadian charities in carrying on activities in other countries. There is more latitude for the donor to make a gift directly to the U.S. organization than to make a gift to a registered Canadian charity, with a view to having it support the U.S. organization with a grant.

(iv) Split Receipting

Under the “split receipting” rules, the value of a gift is the excess of the value of the donated property over the value of any benefit or advantage received by the donor or a person not dealing at arm’s length with the donor. This will apply where some consideration is received from the charity, such as recognition, a small gift, membership, a meal, etc. A charity must place a value on any benefit received by the donor in exchange for the payment, and issue a receipt for the “eligible” amount, even if the benefit is not from the charity itself.

(v) Tax Shelters

As a result of perceived abuses, the value of the property donated to a charity cannot exceed its cost, if a gift occurs within three years of acquisition of the property by the donor, or if the donor acquired the property within the preceding ten years and it is reasonable to conclude that one of the main reasons for acquiring it was to make a gift to a qualified donee, regardless of the actual value of the property. If property is acquired with any expectation that it may be given to a registered charity during the lifetime of the owner, its value cannot exceed its cost. This does not apply to gifts of inventory, marketable securities, Canadian real estate, certified cultural property or approved ecological property or to gifts on death, but applies to gifts of cultural property after February 10, 2014 if the donor acquired the property as part of a “tax shelter gifting arrangement”. The intention of the donor when the donated property is acquired is relevant. If one of the main reasons for acquiring the property was to make a gift (other than by will), the donor may have to use the acquisition cost as the fair market value at the time of the gift. For gifts that are subject to the three-year rule or the 10-year rule there are extensive “tracing” rules to deal with transfers of property prior to the time of the gift.

The reassessment period for participants in tax shelters or “reportable transactions” is extended until three years after filing where the information that should have been filed by the tax shelter promoter or with respect to the reportable transaction has not been filed on a timely basis or has not been filed at all. In most situations, if a taxpayer files a notice of objection to an assessment, there is no requirement to pay the amount in dispute. To discourage taxpayers from participating in charitable donation tax shelters and to reduce the risk that unpaid amounts will not be collected after objections and appeals have been exhausted, CRA can collect 50% of the disputed amount of tax, interest or penalties even if an objection or appeal is pending.

(vi) Anti-Avoidance Rules

An anti-avoidance rule can apply to a charity that receives cash from a donor and uses it to buy property from the donor at more than its cost. These rules are very far reaching and can have a significant effect on a number of situations in which donors expect to receive credit for the value of the property rather than its cost. CRA expects charities to be diligent in establishing the fair market value based on the “cost” approach, and in determining the value of any advantage that would reduce the eligible amount of a gift. If a donor fails to inform the registered charity of circumstances that reduce the eligible amount, despite the amount shown on the official receipts, the eligible amount will be nil. This is a significant risk for a donor who is prepared to gamble that an advantage will not reduce the eligible amount of the gift. Registered charities should review the circumstances in which gifts of property are received when determining the eligible amount of the gift. In many cases, this will require consultations with the donor.

(vii) Intermediate Sanctions

CRA can assess charities for intermediate sanctions, which give it the option of assessing tax or penalties rather than revoking registration, for various types of non-compliance, such as issuing improper receipts, carrying on an unrelated business (in the case of a charitable foundation or charitable organization) or carrying on any business (in the case of a private foundation), acquiring control of a corporation, conferring an undue benefit and other defaults. The rules for creating endowments, transfers between charities and meeting the disbursement quota require charities to plan carefully. Anti-avoidance rules prevent “trafficking” in unused charitable donations made by corporations.

(viii) Private Foundations

A private foundation that owns more than 2% of any class of shares of a corporation is required to report its holdings together with those of persons not dealing at arm’s length with the foundation when filing its T3010 return. Where the foundation holds more than 2% and the combined holdings of the foundation and non-arm’s length persons exceed 20%, either the foundation or the other persons (or the group collectively) must divest to below 20%. If the divestiture does not occur within stipulated periods of time, the foundation will be subject to penalties. CRA can treat non-arm’s length persons as dealing at arm’s length, if sufficient reasons are given.

(ix) Disbursement Quota

The disbursement quota requires a registered charity to spend at least 3.5% of the average value of its accumulated investment assets in the preceding two years on its own charitable activities or by making gifts to qualified donees. Charitable organizations with less than $100,000 of such assets and charitable foundations with less than $25,000 of such assets are not subject to this requirement. Previous gifts with restrictions that prevent the charity from spending the capital will be restricted under charity or trust law, after the disbursement quota rules were relaxed.

(x) Refund of Gifts

CRA can issue a reassessment to disallow a credit or deduction and make consequential assessments if donated property is returned to the donor by the qualified donee. The qualified donee returning a gift must issue a revised receipt and send a copy to CRA if the amount changes by more than $50. Qualified donees must file an information return to disclose returned gifts.

(xi) List of Qualified Donees

CRA maintains a publicly available list of qualified donees, including registered charities, RCAAAs, Canadian municipalities, certain municipal and public bodies performing a function of government in Canada, certain housing corporations, prescribed foreign universities and certain foreign “organizations” (this will be extended to foreign “charities” under the 2015 budget). Most qualified donees are subject to some of the compliance rules that previously applied to registered charities and are required to maintain and make available proper books and records and issue proper receipts. Failure to do so could lead to suspension of receipting privileges, removal from the list of qualified donees or revocation of registration, in the case of RCAAAs. RCAAAs are required to have the promotion of amateur athletics in Canada as their exclusive purpose and function and are subject to rules dealing with the conferral of undue benefits and carrying on an unrelated business, similar to the rules that apply to registered charities.

CRA can refuse to register or revoke the registration of a charity or RCAA or suspend its receipting privileges if a director or equivalent official is found to have been involved in certain inappropriate conduct. This generally would be the case if that person has been found guilty of a criminal offence in Canada (or outside Canada, if that offence, committed in Canada, would be a criminal offence) relating to financial dishonesty and has not received a pardon. It also applies to directors or equivalent officials who had been involved in the operation of a charity or RCAA that was engaged in serious non-compliance for which its registration was revoked within the past five years, or who were “promoters” of a “gifting arrangement” or other tax shelter in which a registered charity or RCAA participated, if the registration of the charity or RCAA was revoked within the past five years. There is no requirement to disclose the existence of ineligible individuals in an annual return and CRA will use an educational process if it finds ineligible individuals are acting as trustees or directors, and ask the registered charity or RCAA to remove them. This could raise non-tax issues.

(xii) Graduated Rate Estates

There will be a deemed disposition of capital property in the year of death at fair market value unless there is a spousal rollover. For deaths prior to 2016, a gift to a charity made by can offset the tax in the terminal return. Under the 2014 federal budget changes, the offsetting credit will not be available until the estate actually transfers the property to a charity (within 36 months after death) and carries the credit back to the year of death. The terminal return may have been filed, and there may be an interest cost in paying tax on the capital gain and not being able to offset it until the transfer occurs, the receipt is received and the deduction can be carried back. The 36-month limit could be a problem if there are disputes involving an estate and the transfer of property cannot be completed. There may be questions about the legitimacy of a will, the entitlement of particular beneficiaries, including the charity, etc., that create uncertainty as to whether a transfer of property can be made to the charity within that period. Under the former rules, the gift is to be deemed to have been made in the year of death, regardless of when the actual transfer takes place.

CRA says the value used as the eligible amount for a gift made by will is the same as the value used to determine the capital gain at death, regardless of the value when the property is actually transferred to the charity. Under the 2014 changes, the capital gain will apparently still be measured by the fair market value at the date of death, but the charitable receipt will be based on the value of the property when the transfer occurs, up to 36 months later. If the value of the property fluctuates (which is almost always likely to be the case, except for property with a clearly fixed value), the value of the gift will be more or less than the value used to determine the capital gain. This presents a potential mismatch, along with the concern about the interest cost, if the transfer does not occur until after the terminal return has been filed.

There are issues about transfers of the residue of an estate with an intervening life interest. Jurisprudence has established that a gift of the residue of an estate to a charity is treated as a current gift, regardless of the fact that the charity does not receive the property until later, as long as the value of the residual interest can be calculated using actuarial principles, and there is no discretion to encroach on capital prior to the death of the income beneficiary. The value of the residual interest is determined by subtracting the current value of the life interest, based on various assumptions, from the value of the assets, as in the case of a charitable remainder trust. CRA has accepted this approach.

If there is a delay in completing the transfer of property by will, there are questions about income received on that property before the transfer. CRA says the estate cannot allocate the income to the charity and deduct it in computing its income and, also treat it as a charitable donation. The estate will be able to choose one course or the other, but not both. If income earned on property not transferred until after death might be regarded as income of the estate, “payable” to the charity, deductible in computing the estate’s income and included in the income of the charity, then this should be relatively neutral and not cause tax consequences for the estate or the charity. On the other hand, if the income is treated as part of the gift to the charity, there might be a delay if the property has not been transferred and the time frame for recognizing the donation is delayed. For deaths before 2016, the gift is treated as a gift in the year of death and the income from that property would likely be regarded as either income payable to the charity (and deductible by the estate) or part of the gift and thus included in the amount of the receipt for the year of death.

An estate can carry back a capital loss realized in its first year, and deduct it from realized gains in the terminal return. It is not clear if a similar mechanism will apply to enable an estate to carry back credits from the estate in the 36 months to the year of death or the year prior to death. It appears the estate will file an amended terminal return or an amended return for the prior year, if a credit is carried back. This could affect the interest that is refunded as a result of the overpayment in the terminal return or the year prior to death.

ANTI-TERRORISM RULES

Very broad rules in the ITA and other legislation give sweeping powers to the federal government to try to address abuses through which terrorism is funded through Canadian registered charities. Donors should be aware of these rules and carry out appropriate due diligence before making donations to organizations that may be subject to these rules.

Similarly, charities should carefully consider the identity of donors, and the way in which donors have obtained funds and other donated property. Charities should review their lists of donors for organizations that may be identified as terrorist groups or affiliated with such groups or that might (even unknowingly) be assisting that type of activity. This can be of particular concern for organizations that are members of affiliated groups of charities, since one organization can be exposed for activities of another in certain circumstances. Both charities and donors would be well advised to consider these issues if there is any possibility of a terrorist connection. CRA has issued a checklist to help charities and donors identify potential problems and assist charities in developing good management practices. In addition to the ITA, the Charities Registration (Security Information) Act ("CRSIA") may be relevant. Under the CRSIA and the ITA, registration can be revoked if a charity makes its resources available, directly or indirectly, to a "listed entity" for purpose of the Criminal Code or an entity that engages in "terrorist activities" or activities that "support" terrorist activities. There are other prohibitions on funding or otherwise facilitating terrorism. Current proposals will make terrorism a more relevant issue for many charities, particularly if they carry out foreign activities. More information can be obtained from the CRA website.

The annual T3010 return must disclose information about funding, and in particular, information about funding from non-resident donors. If a registered charity or RCHAA accepts a donation from another country or an agency of that country that Canada considers to be a supporter of terrorism for purposes of the State Immunity Act, the Minister of National Revenue can refuse to register it or revoke its registration. The federal government is proposing stringent new rules relating to anti-terrorism, including rules that could apply to charities and other qualified donees.

2015 BUDGET ISSUES

The Notice of Ways and Means Motion dealing with the budget does not provide details about the proposals for donations of cash proceeds of sales of private company shares or real estate. It is not clear if a tracing mechanism will be required so the actual sale proceeds are donated or if an "amount" of cash, based on the sale proceeds, can be donated. The Department of Finance may adopt rules similar to the rules for donations of proceeds from the sale of shares acquired under eligible stock options. Under those rules, the taxpayer can direct a broker, who issues stock option shares and sells them, to transfer all or part of the proceeds directly to a charity. The rules contemplate that the sale proceeds will not be paid to the taxpayer, but transferred "immediately" by the broker directly to the charity. If only a part of the proceeds are transferred directly by the broker to the charity, the amount of the donation is pro-rated and determined as if only some of the shares acquired under the option had been donated. This seems to be similar to the concept in the 2015 proposals.

It is not clear if the taxpayer will be able to sell the shares or real estate other than for cash, but within 30 days make a cash payment based on the sale proceeds, using other funds. Money is fungible and the funds received from the sale will rarely be identifiable as the same "cash proceeds" that are donated. Under the proposals "cash proceeds from the disposition" of the shares or real estate must be donated within 30 days after the disposition. This suggests the sale must be for cash and the same cash received on closing must somehow be segregated and transferred directly to the charity. It is not clear if this will require some form of escrow on closing, so the sale proceeds (presumably net of related expenses) can be donated directly and not intermingled with other funds. Lawyers' trust accounts may often be involved in a closing, with "cash proceeds" losing their identity. Perhaps the sale must be only for cash but the cash donated need not be traced directly to the sale. The legislation will presumably clarify this. If taxpayers are required to sell only for cash, the pool of buyers may be more limited. Allowing the taxpayer to donate cash derived from any source within 30 days after the sale would seem to offer a broader incentive and the anti-avoidance rules could presumably address potential abuse from arm's length sales for non-cash consideration.

Under the proposed anti-avoidance rules, the exempt gain will be taxable if within five years after the disposition, the donor or a non-arm's length person reacquires the property or, in the case of shares, the donor or a non-arm's length person acquires "substituted" shares, or the shares are redeemed and the corporation and the donor are not dealing at arm's length at that time. These rules will presumably be flushed out in more detail when the legislation is introduced, as will the rules dealing with the tracing of the cash proceeds.

PROFILE

Impact of Legacy Donors

Phyllis Yaffe has made some bold moves in her life. One that caught my eye was her million-dollar planned gift to Ryerson University, announced last year. I'll admit I hadn't heard of Phyllis, a powerful and seasoned media executive, before I came across her gift announcement in Ryerson's alumni magazine. A million-dollar gift, while extremely generous, doesn't always make front-page headlines (not after The Giving Pledge). Nonetheless, I was deeply impressed and moved by Phyllis' gift for what it represents.

Her gift led this researcher to delve deeper into her career and life history. Born in Winnipeg, Phyllis studied arts and library science. She began her career as a reference librarian in Toronto. Steadily moving up the corporate management ranks at Alliance Atlantis was no easy feat, especially for a woman. When I searched further, I discovered that Phyllis expressed public frustration toward Corporate Canada's disengagement with female executives, a decade ago. It involved taking to verbal task a panel of male executives who were bemoaning the lack of qualified female professionals to serve on this country's for-profit boards. Phyllis' tirade, as The Globe & Mail referred to it, earned her accolades: seats on both corporate and non-profit boards and honours by the Women's Executive Network and the Canadian Broadcasters Association Hall of Fame.

Phyllis chaired Ryerson's Board of Governors when she announced she is leaving a gift through her will. She said her personal connection to Ryerson began when she was invited to serve on this board. Learning more about how this university worked and the people who made it tick led to her eventual generosity.

Of course, Phyllis Yaffe wasn't obligated to make her planned giving known to Ryerson, much less announce her intention in a news release. Her bold move inspired me to take notice. Having an opportunity to ask her why she gave is rare among planned giving donors. She serves as an example for other philanthropists, many of whom are women, to consider doing the same; to make their intentions known and give us the opportunity to appreciate and celebrate them during their lifetime. Overnight, Phyllis became one of my philanthropic heroines.

As you may have gathered, I'm not a charity staffer who is hoping for a big bequest by someone unknown or peripheral to land at my organization (with fingers crossed behind my back). I wish our next bequest donor is someone we already know and appreciate. I hope that we're already connecting and engaging with our next transformational planned gift donor now while she (or he or they) is still very much alive and vibrant, like Phyllis Yaffe.

A "shy and reclusive heiress" by the name of Judith Jardine helped form my strong stance for fuller disclosure. The last in her family lineage, the late Judith lived alone in a rambling Vancouver mansion. Little else is known about her life. Of course, I did some searching on my own and discovered she was well-educated with multiple university degrees (including library science training like Phyllis). Judith made history in BC when she left one of the largest ever bequest donations to three charities totaling about $40 million. She gave Vancouver Foundation one of our largest ever donations, including her home.

The gift was a complete (albeit pleasant) shock to foundation staff who wished we had known Judith while she was alive to thank her and celebrate her for this gift. Why did she choose and entrust us with her final wishes? Getting to know our donors better, especially their philanthropic intentions, forms the core of our day-to-day mission in donor services.

Knowing that many give anonymously to avoid additional funding requests is genuinely understood. I appreciate the care and sensitivity (sometimes, confidentiality) which is required when it comes to charitable and estate matters in particular. One tactful approach to help discover tomorrow's transformational donors is well-articulated by gift planners at the Lupa Zoo of Ludlow, Massachusetts:

"We understand that you may want to keep estate plans private, but we would appreciate having the opportunity to acknowledge and recognize your generosity. We encourage you to share your planned giving intentions with us."

How about one step further? As a sector we could encourage more donors like Phyllis Yaffe to come forward publicly; be bold with their legacy giving. No matter its scale and delivery, philanthropy is a form of expression - the expression of values, passions, hopes and dreams. It's meant to be shared and celebrated during a donor's lifetime.

The late Judith Jardine managed to make the front page of the local newspaper when her estate gift was eventually made public. This day-long recognition is a mere footnote in my province's philanthropic history. For someone who studies philanthropic behaviour for a living, the accumulation of similar stories in our sector can be frustrating.

I didn't get the chance to thank Judith for her abundant generosity. So learning about Phyllis' gift not only piqued my curiosity, it nudged me to find out more about who she is and where she comes from. I offered heartfelt thanks in my capacity as a proud Ryerson alumna. She was considerate and kind enough to thank me back.

Be bold like Phyllis. Be awe inspiring.

Armed with a post-graduate degree in Journalism from Ryerson University, Preeti Gill is currently Research Manager at Vancouver Foundation. She finds female philanthropists quite fascinating.

GRADUATED RATE ESTATES (I)

New Regime for Estate Donations

Draft legislation released by the Department of Finance on August 29, 2014 implements measures introduced in the Federal Budget 2014. This legislation received Royal Assent on December 16, 2014 and will apply to deaths occurring on and after January 1, 2016. The new rules change significantly the manner in which testamentary charitable gifts will be dealt with under the Income Tax Act RSC 1985, c.1 (5th Supp.) (“ITA”).

Current Regime

Currently, (for pre 2016 deaths) the ITA provides that a charitable gift made by will (often referred to as a “Gift by Will”) is deemed to have been made by the donor immediately prior to death. This is advantageous because it ensures that the donation tax credits arising from the gift may be used in the deceased’s terminal return to offset tax liability arising from the deemed disposition of his or her capital assets immediately prior to death. To the extent that these donation tax credits are not exhausted in the donor’s terminal return, a one-year carry-back of the credits to the year preceding the year of death is permitted.

The Canada Revenue Agency (“CRA”) has issued many publications outlining its position as to what constitutes a “Gift by Will”, and in general, requires that: (i) the terms of the Will provide for a donation of a specific property, a specific amount or a specific percentage of the residue of the estate; (ii) it is clear from the terms of the Will that the executors are required to make the donation; (iii) the estate is in a position to make the donation after the payment of debts; and (iv) the donation is actually made.

Currently, the value of a Gift by Will for charitable receipting purposes is determined on the date of the individual’s death regardless of when the charity actually receives property from the estate.

If a gift does not qualify as a “Gift by Will”, it may qualify as a charitable gift made by an estate or testamentary trust. In other cases, a distribution made to a charity from a testamentary trust will not be considered a charitable gift eligible for donation tax credits but instead will be considered a distribution made in satisfaction of the charity’s capital interest in the testamentary trust and no donation tax credit will be available.

Donation tax credits are also available when a charity is designated as beneficiary under a life insurance policy or registered retirement savings plan (RRSP) or registered retirement income fund (RRIF) or tax free savings account (TFSA).

The New Regime

The new legislation introduces significant changes to this testamentary charitable gift regime for the 2016 and subsequent taxation years both as to timing and recognition of charitable gifts for tax purposes.

Donations made by will and designated donations (RRSP, RRIF, TFSA, and life insurance) will be deemed to be made by the estate at the time when the property is transferred to a charity and no longer will be considered to have been made immediately before the donor’s death.

As well, the fair market value (“FMV”) of the gift for tax receipting purposes is to be determined at the time of the transfer of property rather than the FMV at the date of death.

Elena Hoffstein
Fasken Martineau DuMoulin LLP

The legislation builds some new flexibility into the ability to use of the donation tax credits in respect of estate gifts by will and designated donations by permitting the executors or trustees of a “graduated rate estate” (“GRE”) to allocate the tax credits among:

- the terminal or last taxation year of the donor;
- the taxation year preceding the taxation year of death; and
- the taxation year of the Estate in which the donation is made and up to two (2) prior years of the estate

The concept of GRE was introduced in the 2014 Federal Budget and refers to an estate that arises on or as a consequence of the death of an individual, can exist for up to thirty-six (36) months after death, and qualifies as a personal trust and a testamentary trust. It is only a GRE that enjoys the benefits of the flexibility to allocate the donation tax credit among different tax years and thus if an estate is to benefit from this flexibility the property must be transferred to charity within 36 months after death.

An additional requirement is that the property to be transferred to the charity by the GRE must be property held by the deceased at date of death or property substituted therefor.

Current annual charitable donation limits of 100% of net income for the donor’s last taxation year or for the taxation year preceding the taxation year of death will continue to apply.

An estate other than a GRE will continue to be able to claim the charitable donation tax credit in respect of other donations in the year in which the donations are made or in any of the five following years.

It is also noted that the rules relating to the tax free transfer of publicly traded securities to charity will now be limited to gifts of publicly traded securities made by the GRE.

Some Implications

The new rules appear to provide more flexibility for testamentary charitable gift planning but that flexibility comes at a price.

It will allow executors to claim donation tax credits for testamentary charitable gifts for five different tax periods (the year prior to death, the year of death, and three years of the estate) as opposed to just two tax periods (the year prior to death and the year of death). It will also create more flexibility by apparently eliminating the need for testamentary donations to qualify as "Gift by Wills" so long as the transfer of property to the charity takes place within 36 months of death.

The new rules also provide certainty as to when to value testamentary charitable gifts for charitable receipting purposes - namely, upon the date of receipt of property by the charity. This should eliminate the current divergence of positions taken by charities as to whether the value of the charitable receipt is the value of the donated property on the date of death or the value of the donated property at the time the charity receives it.

Although this flexibility and clarity is in large part welcome, it will provide extra pressures on executors of estates. Executors will need to ensure that estate property is transferred to charities within thirty-six (36) months of death in order to qualify for the ability to allocate donation tax credits in the year of death or the year prior to death. This thirty-six (36) month period may be difficult to meet if (i) the estate is involved in litigation (family law act claims, dependent relief claims, will challenges), (ii) the estate's assets are illiquid (real estate, private company shares), (iii) the donation is made after the death of a life tenant (under current rule such gifts would be claimed in the year of death if the life estate qualified as a charitable remainder trust (no right to encroach on capital during life tenant's lifetime). Moreover, even in ordinary circumstances, if the value of estate property increases or decreases following death, then depending upon the tax outcomes, executors could be criticized for either moving too quickly or waiting too long to transfer property to charities within the 36 month period.

The new regime does not appear to specifically deal with the treatment of gifts to a charity on the death of an intervening life interest (commonly referred to as charitable remainder trusts), which can qualify as a "Gift by Will" under the current regime so long as the trustees have no right to encroach on the capital in favour of the life tenant. The new rules contemplate that the property that is the subject of a testamentary charitable gift must be transferred to a qualified donee within thirty-six (36) months of death. While a residual interest in a charitable remainder trust is a property interest that can be transferred to a qualified donee within thirty-six (36) months of death, it is only that property interest and not the actual underlying property of the charitable remainder trust that can be transferred prior to the death of the life tenant. As a result, there remain some questions as to manner in which testamentary charitable remainder trusts will be dealt with under the new rule.

GRADUATED RATE ESTATES (II)

View from the Trenches

If your charity receives significant planned gifts, you should be concerned about the new Canadian estate and trust tax policies, and especially the Graduated Rate Estate (GRE) rules, which begin January 2016. You need to know that there are at least two very significant problems with the GRE that will cause many of our more generous donors to think twice about estate philanthropy:

1) The new legislated limit of 36 months for completion of estates, and 2) the changes in taxation of certain life interest trusts. A technical discussion of the GRE is beyond the scope of this article, but there is a lot of information available online and from the Canadian Association of Gift Planners (CAGP).

Let me be clear though, most charitable bequests will not be impacted by these new rules because they are relatively modest (under $100,000), and will not be challenged in court or by complications of illiquid assets.

At Simon Fraser University, we have 320 gift expectancies that total $40 million that I am not concerned about. What are of concern are the really big gifts. We have another 15 donors whose estate gifts will add up to more than $38 million, comprised of complex, illiquid assets, and certain types of life estate trusts. These will be negatively impacted by the GRE rules in one way or another. In all likelihood, these extraordinary gifts will not be settled within the 36-month timeline for Graduated Rate Estates, and will therefore not qualify to use charitable tax credits. These donors are seriously at risk of having the strategic philanthropic planning completely undone. This is worrisome.

The Department of Finance needs to amend the rules before they cause serious problems for the charitable sector. The Canadian Association of Gift Planners (CAGP) has facilitated a lot of discussion about the GRE and has also sent a Letter to the Department of Finance stating concerns, suggesting remedies and seeking a meeting with the Tax Policy Branch. I think Finance needs to hear it from different angles.

Here is a story I wrote to illustrate the looming problem. It should resonate with anyone in the charitable sector. The article appeared in the February 2015 edition of Gift Planning in Canada, and is reproduced here by permission.

In early 2004 Simon Fraser University (SFU) was notified of a residual legacy gift in the will of a renowned and respected patron and member of the British Columbia arts community. Her husband, who had died a few years before, was a prolific Canadian artist whose paintings hang in some of the most prestigious galleries and collections around the world. Both of these wonderful people had been granted honorary degrees by SFU and other universities as well. Many of their works have Canadian cultural status.

The majority of the estate was comprised of 2 houses, some retirement investments and around 2,700 works of art ranging from sketches, to prints, sculptures and paintings. There were about 300 premium works that comprised the bulk of the value. The date of death value was placed at $4.5 million. After personal and specific bequests were distributed, the residue for SFU was expected to be a little over $3 million. The will was explicit that the art and property were to be sold and the proceeds used to establish an endowment fund at SFU for a research fellowship in the Faculty of Arts and Social Science.

Doug Puffer
Simon Fraser University

The executor, a professional accountant/trustee, and the art advisor, an expert who was also appointed in the will, were instructed by the deceased to maximize the value of the endowment by maximizing the proceeds from the sale of art and real estate. In April 2011, seven years later, the estate was finally completed and the endowment capitalized with cash gifts totaling over $4.4 million. All in, this was a $6 million estate, with many untold complexities well beyond the scope of this article.

There is no doubt in my mind that the estate was properly and professionally handled, and managed in accordance with the instructions of the will. Do I wish it hadn't taken quite as long to complete? Sure, but I was happy to be patient and realize the extra $1.4 million from the estate that SFU ultimately received. Do I also wish that the estate did not have to pay capital gains taxes which reduced the final donation? You bet I do, but if wishes were wings even pigs could fly.

The Graduated Rate Estate (GRE) legislation announced by the federal government in early 2014 as part of its Economic Action Plan had enormous potential to optimize philanthropic estate management. In reality, when all of the regulatory changes were made known and then digested by experts, we now have a many headed beast that seems to contradict the government's own policies that were specifically designed to encourage estate philanthropy. Beginning January 2016, large complex estates and even lesser value estates in litigation that take longer than 36 months to complete are in danger of having their philanthropic and strategic tax planning components completely unwound.

This will impose a huge pressure on estate trustees, executors and charities to comply with a seemingly arbitrary and apparently inflexible timeline. In many cases it will be impossible.

Now, imagine the same story I just told, with the donor dying in January 2016 and subject to the new Graduated Rate Estate rules including the 36 month timeline. In order to obtain tax relief for the estate and the terminal tax return, the executor would apply for GRE status. But wait, this is British Columbia. Probate will take at least 6 months. Additionally, no distributions from estates are allowed for 210 days from probate to comply with BC's Wills and Estates Succession Act (WESA). At least thirteen months have now passed, leaving 23 months to deadline. Securing a certificate of completion from CRA in this case could easily take six of those months. Seventeen months left (optimistically) and the clock is ticking!

To manage the task at hand, in that timeframe, the executor would need to flood the market with at least half of the art, thereby depressing its fair market value and setting a new low standard for original works and many beautiful limited reproductions. Once the new low prices were established they would have to dump the remaining works into an already saturated market.

Bona fide collectors and art galleries everywhere would fume at the bargain basement prices that would instantly reduce the value of their own pieces. In fact, it's doubtful that a reputable art dealer would even take this on and risk the wrath of their peers, clients, and collectors. In all likelihood, it would be only the very best works that would sell at all, and after deducting the 40-50% dealer's commission, not much would be left; the estate would be lucky to get 30 cents on the dollar.

The executor would be hamstringing between his fiduciary duty to maximize the value of the estate for all beneficiaries and minimizing substantial tax losses by declaring the GRE status. While this may sound like a worst case scenario for charitable estate planning, it is in fact a very likely scenario. Imagine planning a donation for an endowment that would provide $200,000 annually, in perpetuity, for research fellowships only to see it eroded to a quarter of what it could have been because of an imposed timeline that seems arbitrary and definitely inadequate.

Consider its further effect on employment funding. A $4.5 million endowment would provide $200,000 in permanent salary funding for 2-4 fellowships (aka jobs) whereas the likely erosion of that fund to $1.25 million as a result of these new rules could only support one position at best.

Why did the Minister and the Department of Finance think there was a need to invoke a 36 month timeline for estates to complete in order to qualify for charitable tax credits? The simplest of estates can likely be in compliance and it may even help set the pace for executors to expedite the process, however, the really significant donations which arise from complex assets like commercial real estate, private company shares and significant art collections may not even be plausible under the new rules. This will have serious impact on strategic philanthropy, estate and financial planning and the charitable sector. What were they thinking?!

CAGP is interested in cultivating dialogue with government representatives to ensure they understand the full implications of these new estate administration rules on Canada's charities. Real stories about its impact will further strengthen CAGPs ability to paint a compelling picture. If you have similar concerns and accounts of how your charity will be impacted, please write to Ruth MacKenzie, Executive Director of CAGP at rmackenzie@cagp-acpdp.org and give strength to our voice in discussions with the federal government.

GRADUATED RATE ESTATES (III)

Stay Calm

The introduction of the new rules for “estate donations”, effective in 2016, has been a source of concern in the estate planning community. Should donors be worried? Will these rules negatively affect the taxation and administration of an estate if it contains a gift by will? In the vast majority of cases the answer is no. Let me explain why.

An “estate donation” is a new concept that became law in 2014. The most common estate donation is a gift by will. The concept also includes direct designation gifts, which means gifts of life insurance, RRSPs, RRIFs and Tax Free Savings Accounts (TFSA) when a charity is named as a beneficiary on the plan documents.

What’s changed is the taxation of these gifts. Previously, the gift was deemed to be made at date of death, which meant the value claimed for the donation tax benefit was an estimated amount, not what the charity receives. The donation under the old rules is claimed by carrying back to against 100% of net annual income on the final two lifetime returns. These rules are generous. In many cases all tax can be eliminated.

The new rules shifted the donation to the date property is received by the charity. The charity issues a tax receipt for the fair market value of the donation just as it would for a donation made in life. The new rules allow the donation to be claimed over five years -- the final two lifetime returns plus the first 36 months of the estate -- which may increase tax savings for gifts that are large relative to the overall value of the estate.

The concern about the new rules is timing. The executor must transfer the donated property within 36 months from the date of death to qualify for the five-year window. The new period is known as the graduated rate estate or GRE. Often the biggest tax bill is in the final year of life due to the deemed disposition of capital property. Under the new rules, if a distribution is delayed beyond 36 months, there may be a significant tax liability at death and no offsetting tax credits.

For the vast majority of estates, a 36-month distribution period is more than enough. For example, the national median date for the first distribution of an estate by Scotiastart (my employer) is fewer than 250 days. An executor typically has sufficient time to distribute assets within 36 months.

The risk lies with estates that have complex, illiquid assets that are difficult to sell. These assets may include private company shares, real estate or art. The other risk is litigation, when a will is legally challenged. A legal challenge or full blown litigation can take years to resolve and during this period an estate’s assets are frozen. And when assets are frozen, tax savings are lost and value of the estate reduced.

The ideal solution is for the Federal Government to extend the eligible period for transferring donations that may be claimed within the full five-year window. Discussions are already underway about an extended period. I am optimistic that there will be an extension introduced, but it is prudent to plan for the status quo.

There are steps that donors and executors can take to manage risk:

1. Select an experienced or professional executor. Efficient estate administration

Malcolm D. Burrows
Scotia Private Client Group

tion comes from having knowledge and systems that allow timely distributions.

2. Enable your executor to distribute assets “in kind”. Then, if the 36-month deadline is approaching and an estate has illiquid assets, these may be distributed in their current form. The charity would need to sell the asset, but a transfer by the deadline salvages the tax savings.
3. If you are concerned that your estate has illiquid assets that may be difficult to sell, and you have a number of charitable beneficiaries, consider naming an intermediary foundation as a beneficiary. Aqueduct Foundation, a foundation operated by Scotiastart with donor advised funds, enables the will to name a single charity for the benefit of multiple charities. Aqueduct can receive property in-kind and sell it, and then distribute the capital to the named charities.
4. Another option is to replace your gift by will with a fast distribution direct designation gift of life insurance or RRSP/RRIFs. Direct designation gifts also solve the litigation risk because they pass outside the estate, but provide tax savings to the estate.

New rules will produce new planning methods. Keep calm and speak to your lawyer or other estate planning expert.

NON-PROFIT ACTS

ONCA versus CNCA

The Ontario Not-for-Profit Corporations Act (“ONCA”) was originally expected to come into force in 2013, but has been delayed a number of times. The Ontario Government’s latest update stated that ONCA is not expected to take effect before 2016. However, it is not likely to come into effect until July 2016, or even 2017. When ONCA comes into force it will apply to all non-share capital corporations currently under the Ontario Corporations Act (“OCA”).

Many Ontario non-profit corporations have been waiting since 2010, when ONCA was passed, for the changes to come into effect. Many of these corporations have held off on making corporate changes because ONCA is “just around the corner.”

Although some Ontario non-profit corporations may choose to wait for ONCA to come into force, another viable option for an Ontario non-profit corporation is to transfer to the federal jurisdiction by continuing under the Canada Not-for-profit Corporations Act (“CNCA”).

Some Reasons to Move to Federal

A minor advantage of moving to federal jurisdiction is that some people perceive that a federal corporation is more prestigious than a provincial corporation. If an Ontario non-profit corporation’s activities and stakeholders are international in scope, it might find that sometimes people outside of Canada have not heard of “Ontario” but are quite familiar with “Canada”.

Also, if an Ontario non-profit corporation has directors from different provinces serving on its board, the directors may prefer to be working with a corporation that is governed by one federal corporate act rather than a corporation that is governed by an Ontario act. If a person is involved with multiple corporations, some federal and some provincial, governance will be more consistent and straightforward if all of the corporations are governed under the same act.

Many corporate changes for registered charities in Ontario require approval from the Ontario Public Guardian and Trustee (“PGT”), which can slow down the process and create more red tape and costs for Ontario non-profit corporations. Another advantage of moving to the federal jurisdiction is that it allows Ontario non-profit corporations that are also registered charities to avoid this extra layer of corporate regulation. Registered charities will still be overseen by the CRA, but at least they no longer need to get approval from two charity regulators for a corporate change.

The CNCA is already in effect, which means there is no need to wait any longer for the ONCA. The CNCA transition can be completed long before ONCA even comes into force. Corporate changes can be made almost immediately without having to be revisited in a year or two when the ONCA is expected to come into effect. Also, the federal corporate system run by Industry Canada at this time appears to be better organized and more modern. For example, Ontario still uses microfiche when copies of corporate documents are requested, whereas Industry Canada can mail PDFs of the documents in a day. However, this may change once the Ontario system is revamped and improvements are made to the current structure. One of the biggest advantages of moving to the CNCA now is that the Ontario government and PGT are not inundated with applications – it will be interesting to see how they handle tens of thousands of applications when ONCA is finally brought into force.

Some Reasons to Stay Under Ontario Corporate Law

An advantage of staying in the Ontario jurisdiction is that a corporation can avoid any action until the ONCA comes into force and will then have another three years to make corporate changes.

Mark Blumberg
Blumberg Segal LLP

Under the ONCA, the audit exemption will be higher ($500,000) than the current exemption under the CNCA ($250,000), and this may help some organizations with higher revenue that want to avoid an annual audit.

Some OCA corporations like hospitals need to stay in the Ontario system. A few other corporations may have been created under Ontario special acts that gave them significant benefits such as property tax exemption, and they will want to maintain them.

If an Ontario non-profit corporation has ex-officio directors on its board, it can maintain the same structure under the ONCA. The CNCA does not allow ex-officio directors.

If a person is involved with a large number of Ontario non-profit corporations, to maintain consistency, it may be best to keep them all under the OCA and then transfer them to the ONCA. It is easier to operate and set up governance structures for several organizations under one piece of legislation. Also, some organizations for various reasons may wish to, or be required to, remain as Ontario non-profit corporations.

Options, options, options

There are different routes to consider as an Ontario non-profit corporation under the OCA. Some organizations may not be in any rush to transition and may feel that they can deal with the transition to the ONCA when the time comes. Other organizations may want to put this governance purgatory behind them and decide that transitioning to the CNCA is a better option. Either way, all Ontario corporations should begin wrapping their heads around these kinds of issues in preparation for an inevitable corporate transition.

Eugene gets a haircut

Everyone Is Worthy

“Everybody deserves to feel worthy and is worthy of the help that’s out there,” said Eugene.

Eugene was one of over 80 clients of The Salvation Army Ottawa Booth Centre who attended the second annual Project Self Esteem event on November 4th, 2014. The event is part of the Life Skills program and focuses on building self-confidence and job readiness by offering free haircuts and a beard trim, a professional photo shoot and education and employment information from local agencies.

“It does make me feel better if I don’t have hair growing down to my shoulders,” said Eugene. Self-esteem is about how I look at myself and how I present myself to others. If I don’t have any self-esteem I don’t want to be involved or be a part of things.”

Eugene, a father of three, with two successful careers one in the commercial hardware business and the other in IT found himself facing mental health issues including depression and anxiety. This combined with resulting alcoholism kept him from being able to maintain stable employment and it wasn’t long before he also had to leave his home. With nowhere to go, he reached out for assistance at The Salvation Army Booth Centre where he found a home and support.

“I was still on some uneven footing; I wasn’t sure what to do. I had some previous experience with rehabilitation and addiction programs before, but I found there was always a component at the end that was not being dealt with – that being mental health,” said Eugene.

Eugene was encouraged to get involved in the Life Skills program, which was developed by Coordinator Kimberly Zapata in August of 2013. Kim, along with Activity Assistant Drew Corley, helps men in making positive changes in their lives.

The Life Skills program requires each participant to complete 16 lessons, which include building a positive image, conversation skills, forgiveness, stress and anger management, coping with change, decision making, goal setting and healthy leisure.

“I am working with the Life Skills program and it’s giving me time to put things in order such as looking for a place to live and setting weekly goals. So far they have been very helpful,” said Eugene.

“As for Kim and Drew, at first I think their youth can be deceiving, but as it turns out they both have a lot of understanding of the people that come to the program. They have even engaged us on outings on Saturdays. We went to the agricultural museum and to the harvest festival downtown in October. It’s really great and refreshing.”

“Project Self Esteem is about building self-confidence among homeless men in a safe non-judgmental environment,” said Kim, “The motto of the event is ‘When you look good, you feel good and you do good things.’ The afternoon offers great opportunities to see The Ottawa Booth Centre’s programs in action, providing hope and dignity to our clients as they transform on the inside and out.

For Eugene his immediate goals include continuing to deal with mental health issues, finding housing and completing the Life Skills program before attempting to re-enter the workforce.

“As difficult as it may be for me to be in a situation like this, I know that I am not alone and The Salvation Army is here to help me,” said Eugene.

As it is for so many people in times of crises, sharing his story wasn’t easy, but Eugene felt compelled to tell it.

“I recognize that in society there are those that persecute and those that assist people in need. As a recipient of the caring that I couldn’t find in my everyday life, I need to share how important it is to me to be able to express the need for salvation in my spirit and mind. There is so much to say.”

The Salvation Army Ottawa Booth Centre (OBC) is a place of new beginnings. It is part of larger community initiatives in addressing many of the issues of homelessness and chronic poverty.

Our community of clients includes the homeless, the hungry, the unemployed and the lonely.

OBC provides many diversified programs and services with the purpose to promote the renewal of body, mind and spirit. The Life Skills program and the annual Project Self Esteem event is just one of the many ways The Salvation Army offers a holistic approach to serving our clients.

The staff and volunteers are committed to serving our clients with compassion, recognizing the inherent dignity of each individual.

BUDGET 2015

Flexibility Regarding Limited Partnerships

The 2015 Federal Budget proposes a new measure that will increase the flexibility available to registered charities in structuring their investments.

Under the current rules in the Income Tax Act, registered charities are limited in their ability to pursue business activities. Charitable organizations and public foundations are permitted to pursue a “related business” while private foundations are prohibited from pursuing any business activities. These rules resulted in limitations on charities investing in limited partnerships. It has been CRA’s administrative view that an interest that is a partnership is a business interest and thus the limitations on charities carrying on business applied. In general, under partnership legislation a general or limited partner is deemed to carry on the business of the partnership.

In practice, this has meant that registered charities were largely prevented from investing in limited partnerships or are required to implement more complex business trust structures to ensure compliance.

Many charities felt this limitation was highly impractical and prevented the effective investment of charitable funds. Registered charities have a responsibility to invest the assets of the charity prudently, and limited partnerships are a common vehicle for private equity and hedge fund investments. Furthermore, limited partnerships are often desirable as a vehicle for engaging in impact investments that generate a return on investment as well as further a social purpose. Registered charities have argued that they would benefit from a greater ability to make direct investments in limited partnerships.

The Government has responded to these submissions in the 2015 Federal Budget. The Budget proposes to remove the restriction on registered charities investing as passive investors in a limited partnership. Specifically, the Budget proposes to amend the Act to provide that a registered charity will not be considered to be carrying on a business solely because it acquires or holds an interest in a limited partnership.

The Budget proposes changes to subsection 253.1 of the Act to provide that a registered charity shall not solely, because of the acquisition or holding of an interest in a partnership, be considered to carry on any business of the partnership if the following conditions are met:

- the charity – together with all non-arm’s length entities – holds 20% or less of the interests in the limited partnership;
- the liability of the members is limited (i.e. it is a limited partnership); and
- the charity deals at arm’s length with each general partner of the limited partnership.

The Budget document states that the excess corporate holdings rules – which place limits on shareholdings by private foundations – will be amended so that shares held through limited partnerships will be caught. The Budget also states that the rules regarding non-qualifying securities and loanbacks – which affect the timing and value of gifts of securities of entities related to the donor – will be amended to apply to donations of interests in limited partnerships.

The Budget notes that these rules would not apply where a charitable organization or public foundation carries on a related business through a limited partnership, as related businesses are permitted for such charities. The Budget also confirms that these measures will apply to registered Canadian amateur athletic associations.

This change will be welcome in the sector. Many charities, and in particular private foundations seeking to engage in social finance and impact investing, have been constrained by the archaic limitation on making investments in limited partnerships. Limited partnerships are an attractive investment vehicle (whether in the context of alternative investments or social finance) and it will benefit the sector to enable charities to invest in limited partnerships without having to implement complex structures to comply with the rules. This will allow more efficient and effective use of charitable capital. On the other hand, charities with existing limited partnership investments held through business trusts should seek advice on whether to unwind these trusts.

The inclusion of the 20% limit on holdings is unfortunate and could give rise to unnecessary complexity. It is difficult to understand why the Government saw the need for this requirement (and the likely addition of complicated forms to track it).

The Budget papers have confirmed Miller Thomson’s long held view that charitable organizations and public foundations could invest in limited partnerships that would be considered “related businesses”. This confirmation is welcome as some have challenged this conclusion in the past.

The Budget confirms that this measure applies in respect of investments in limited partnerships that are made or acquired on or after April 21, 2015.

DONS PLANIFIÉS

Perceptions et Attitudes - Québec

Patrimoine vert vous présente un résumé d'enquêtes effectuées en 2005 et 2011. Bonne nouvelle : il y a une légère évolution des perceptions pour le mieux ! Pour confirmer cette évolution, nous souhaitons une nouvelle enquête en 2016 ou 2017.

Le présent rapport contient les résultats d'un sondage réalisé auprès de gens résidant dans les régions métropolitaines de Montréal et de Québec. La population d'étude est constituée de personnes âgées de 35 ans et plus.

L'étude avait pour principal objectif d'évaluer les connaissances et les comportements de la population québécoise en matière de dons planifiés et de mesurer l'évolution de la participation à ce type de don depuis les dernières années.

Le vieillissement de la population n'a pas eu d'impact sur les changements observés. Pour le démontrer, nous avons pondéré les résultats de 2011 sur la base de la structure d'âge de 2005 (pour faire comme si la population n'avait pas vieilli) et avons constaté les mêmes changements que lorsque les résultats sont pondérés sur la base de la structure d'âge de 2011.

PLANIFICATION DE LA VIEILLESSE ET DE L'HÉRITAGE

- Augmentation du nombre de Québécois qui sont déjà à la retraite.
- Légère augmentation du nombre de Québécois non retraités qui ont commencé à planifier leur retraite.

- Augmentation de la plupart des Québécois qui ne sont pas à leur retraite et ont déjà commencé à la planifier (73 %), une légère augmentation depuis les dernières années puisqu'en 2005, ce sont 67 % des Québécois non retraités qui avaient planifié leur retraite.
- Parmi les répondants ayant un revenu moyen de 80 000 $ et plus en 2011, cette proportion s'élève à 92 %.
- Plus de la moitié des gens qui ont commencé à planifier leur retraite font affaire avec un conseiller financier ou un professionnel (66 %) et pour la plupart, il s'agit d'un planificateur financier professionnel (82 %).
- On peut également remarquer une augmentation des gens qui ont rédigé leur testament: 68 % des gens ont rédigé leur testament (59 % en 2005) et il s'agit presque à l'unanimité d'un testament notarié (93 % 86 % en 2005).
- Notons que le pourcentage de gens ayant rédigé leur testament croît avec l'âge et que parmi eux, 22 % ont récemment pensé à réviser leur testament.
- Perception des organismes de bienfaisance
- Légère diminution du nombre de dons effectués par les Québécois.
- Amélioration de la confiance des Québécois envers les organismes de bienfaisance.

Natasha van Bentum
Directrice, Patrimoine vert

- Diminution du nombre de Québécois qui ont la perception que les organismes de bienfaisance disposent de trop d'argent.
- Une forte proportion de Québécois ont fait un don à un organisme de bienfaisance au cours des 12 derniers mois (81 %), on remarque toutefois une légère baisse au cours des dernières années puisqu'en 2005, ce sont 85 % des Québécois qui avaient mentionné avoir fait un don. Le nombre de dons effectués par année semble augmenter avec l'âge (20 % des gens âgés de 65 ans et plus ont fait plus de 10 dons dans la dernière année).
- Le niveau de confiance des gens envers les organismes de bienfaisance s'est beaucoup amélioré, les Québécois âgés de moins de 54 ans étant ceux qui leur accordent la plus grande confiance.
- La perception des gens quant aux sommes d'argent dont disposent les organismes est positive. En effet, beaucoup moins de gens entretiennent aujourd'hui la perception que ceux-ci disposent de trop d'argent pour s'acquitter de leur mission. On peut conclure que l'image que transmettent les organismes de bienfaisance s'est beaucoup améliorée au cours des dernières années.

- Augmentation de la notoriété spontanée des dons planifiés.

- Augmentation du nombre de Québécois qui ont entendu parler de la possibilité d'effectuer un don planifié par leur notaire.
- Diminution de la proportion des Québécois qui planifient effectuer un don planifié dans le futur.

Ce sont les organismes de bienfaisance qui sont la source d'information première considérée par les Québécois pour un don planifié.

La notoriété spontanée des dons planifiés a pris de l'ampleur au cours des dernières années: les gens semblent être de plus en plus informés. Beaucoup moins de gens ont soumis cette année une définition erronée du don planifié qu'en 2005.

De plus, parmi la proportion de Québécois qui font affaire avec un notaire, plus de gens reçoivent de l'information de celui-ci sur les dons planifiés qu'en 2005. Toutefois, la source d'information première pour ces dons reste toujours les organismes de bienfaisance.

Cependant, le nombre de Québécois qui ont déjà effectué un don planifié n'a pas augmenté. En outre, malgré le fait que la notoriété spontanée des dons planifiés et la confiance des gens à l'égard des organismes de bienfaisance se soient améliorées au cours des dernières années, la proportion de Québécois qui anticipent effectuer un don planifié dans le futur a diminué.

PERCEPTIONS À L'ÉGARD DES DONS PLANIFIÉS

- Depuis 2005, les Québécois pensent toujours, en majorité, que s'il y avait plus d'information disponible sur les dons planifiés, plus de gens en feraient.
- Légère diminution du nombre de Québécois qui ont des perceptions négatives ou fausses sur les dons planifiés.
- Augmentation du nombre de Québécois qui savent que les dons vont faire une réelle différence et croient en la cause.
- Augmentation de la notoriété des avantages fiscaux liés aux dons planifiés.

Point encourageant pour les organismes de bienfaisance, davantage de gens aujourd'hui estiment que la principale raison qui incite les gens à effectuer un don planifié est due au fait qu'ils sont convaincus que les dons vont faire une différence, ils croient en la cause (2005 : 14 %, 2011 : 21 %).

Cependant, une majorité de gens ont la perception que le manque d'information sur les dons planifiés représente un frein à faire un don planifié pour beaucoup.

Parmi les gens qui savent ce qu'est un don planifié, la moitié d'entre eux sont au courant des avantages fiscaux qui s'y rattachent, les reçus d'impôt étant l'avantage fiscal le plus connu.

FREINS ET MOTIVATIONS À EFFECTUER UN DON PLANIFIÉ

- Le frein le plus courant à faire un don planifié reste toujours la perception que seul les gens qui ont moins d'obligations familiales peuvent se permettre de faire un don planifié.
- Diminution du nombre de Québécois qui croient que les gens qui sont les plus motivés à faire un don planifié sont ceux qui font du bénévolat et sont généreux de nature.
- Le frein le plus courant concernant les dons planifiés est la perception des gens que la planification d'un don planifié survient seulement lorsqu'on n'a plus d'obligations familiales, (p. ex. : lorsque les enfants quittent le foyer et deviennent autonomes). Cette impression est restée stable depuis les dernières années.

Par ailleurs, selon les Québécois, les principales sources de motivation à faire un don planifié sont attribuées en majorité à des gens qui sont généreux de nature (p. ex. : bénévolat) ou qui ont déjà reçu de l'aide d'un organisme de bienfaisance.

Gifts of Private Company Shares and Real Estate

That's not very fair," said the business owner. This man had founded a specialty food company 32 years ago, and after many ups and downs he was contemplating an exit by selling to a larger competitor. He planned to donate 20 percent of the value of the company to support causes in his Ontario small city. What prompted the comment was that he had assumed that if he donated shares in his private company to charity it would be exempt from capital gains, just like a recent gift of public securities he had made to the local hospital foundation. When he made this comment, the business owner would have had to pay capital gains tax on the gift amount of his private company shares.

The 2015 Federal Budget altered this inequity. As of 2017, gifts of private company shares and taxable real estate (anything but a principal residence) will be exempt from capital gains, but certain conditions will apply. In particular, according to the Budget announcement, the donor will need to sell the shares or real estate and then transfer all or a portion of the cash proceeds to charity within 30 days. Moreover, the sale of the property will need to be to an arm's length person. To understand the conditions it is helpful to look at how and why they emerged.

Good donation tax incentives leverage new dollars for charity. In tax policy terms there are three factors to consider:

1. Tax incentive for the donor to give, which includes fairness of the tax incentive;
2. Valuation certainty for Government to ensure the foregone revenue represents real value and will provide real public benefit;
3. Consideration of charities. Are donated funds easily deployed and generally available to all charities?

Private company shares and real estate present special problems when donated. They are complex property. To varying degrees each type has restricted liquidity, and requires formal valuations and expertise to manage. For charities, an in-kind donation of private securities or real estate is a complex management process fraught with expenses, risk and valuation concerns. A regime that encouraged in-kind donations would only be advantageous to a handful of large, sophisticated charities with deep pockets and management resources. The receipt and management of these assets in-kind is simply impossible for the majority of Canada's 86,000 charities, most of which are small and volunteer run.

For the last seven years there has been a policy debate played out through articles, think tank papers, debates, submissions to Parliament and Government, newspaper ads and volunteer lobbying about the best way to eliminate capital gains on gifts to charity. (Special thanks to super-volunteer Donald K Johnson for his tireless leadership of the campaign.) For taxpayers the ideal would be to have the incentive, but few restrictions on its use. Charities were nervous about management and acceptance issues. Government was worried about valuation abuses that would produce large tax savings but little public benefit.

The idea that the asset should first be sold and then cash proceeds donated within 30 days to one or more charity has a precedent in the Income Tax Act (Canada). Since 2001, donors could exercise employee stock options, sell the underlying shares and donate the cash proceeds within 30 days to eliminate the employment tax (taxed at capital gains rates) on the donated value. I first suggested that this idea be used for taxable real estate in a C.D. Howe Institute paper in September 2009. My rationale was that if we wanted to eliminate capital gain on these asset classes there needed to be mechanisms that balanced all interests.

I recognize that the "donate cash after a sale" mechanism will not make everyone

The Budget proposal is designed to encourage donors like the above-mentioned business owner: long-term owners who built wealth and want to give back at the time of a sale. Donors who are not contemplating an outright sale or even partial outside ownership of their company will be frustrated. This group can still donate their shares, but without the capital gains exemption. Moreover, the Budget is short on details and does not address "mission-use" gifts of real estate (when the charity retains the property and uses it for its charitable purposes) or estate donations. I hope these final two issues will be addressed, but there are situations where the new incentive will not apply.

Overall, however, the new incentive will unlock new dollars in a form that is easy for charities to accept and use. Large charities will not have a resource advantage over small charities. It will benefit charities in rural areas and towns, as well as cities that have fewer public company head offices. In many parts of the country the largest potential donors have made their wealth as entrepreneurs and in real estate. The baby boomers are reported to have over $1 trillion in businesses that they plan to sell in the next decade. The sale of properties such as cottages and snow-bird homes will also benefit charities.

By 2017 the details of the new incentive will become clearer, but already Canadians with private companies and taxable real estate can start thinking about this new planning and philanthropic opportunity. May it help facilitate generous and previously unimaginable gifts.

SOCIAL JUSTICE

One Man's Planned Gift

Doug Bullock, MSW/83, always knew he wanted to make a difference in the area of social policy. Now, he's honouring that commitment by ensuring future students of Carleton University's School of Social Work will continue to make a positive change in local communities and around the world.

Bullock says his interest in social work developed from his personal experience. "I was born into a difficult situation," he said. "My mother gave me up for adoption and I was adopted by wonderful parents who gave me so much. I realize how difficult it is if you don't have access to opportunity."

Both Bullock and his sister were adopted from different families and given a "tremendous start" thanks to their adoptive parents. Bullock says his inspiration for getting involved in social work came from seeing the contrast between people who are fortunate enough to have access to resources, and a stable emotional environment, and those who don't.

"I wish it was something that everyone would have access to," he said. "I lucked out."

After completing his undergraduate degree, Bullock worked as a senior research assistant at the Addiction Research Foundation in Ottawa, ON. There, he met Masters of Social Work students, from Carleton, who were completing their independent inquiry at the foundation. Seeing, first-hand, the inequalities that are present in today's societal framework, Bullock wanted to move away from statistical work and become more involved in the community.

"I was privileged to a lot of information about people," said Bullock. "Poverty. I saw it so much in my work. People with the biggest social issues often have the most limited resources. It seems unjust."

Bullock enrolled in the Masters of Social Work program at Carleton and was able to learn more about the structural approach of the system. "I was quite naïve about that approach, beforehand, but the program inspired me to think critically. It was a great awakening."

Bullock did his placement at the Assembly of First Nations and helped to build the framework for a national Native alcohol and drug addiction program. After writing his thesis, Bullock returned to the Addictions Research Foundation, this time, in a different role. He worked with different services to introduce the latest research knowledge about how to treat addictions, with the goal being to get local services to try and adopt the ideas.

Towards the end of his career, Bullock helped set up a school for addiction studies in the Ottawa area—bringing experts from around North America to talk about addictions to people in the community.

Already leaving a legacy with the impact of his work, Bullock knew he wanted to do more—to one day contribute what he could to a cause he was passionate about.

After seeing a few close friends battle serious illness, he realized the time was now.

"I wanted to start giving now rather than wait," he said. "One realizes that life is short and I've been very lucky. I wanted to see my contribution have a positive impact while I was still alive."

When it came to deciding where his funds would go, the answer came easily. "I

Doug Bullock
MSW, Carleton University

developed an attachment to Carleton University," he said. "It gave me great inspiration. I learned so much from my professors and attending as a mature student, people were really helpful. It was such a good learning environment and I grew so much from the experience I had at the school."

Not only did Bullock feel indebted to the university, but he also wanted to help shape society in a broader way. "I wanted to donate to something that would outlive me and hopefully make a difference."

Bullock met with the director of Personal and Planned Giving at Carleton and was astounded by the knowledge and help she provided. "It was important to work with someone who could help shape my need to give back."

He now contributes annually to Carleton's Centre for Studies in Poverty and Social Citizenship and through a scholarship founded in his parents' memory—the Doug and Ollie Bullock Memorial Bursary. He has also pledged a portion of his estate to Carleton that will go directly to the School of Social Work.

Bullock hopes by being outspoken about his contribution to Carleton he will inspire others to give.

"I want my legacy to be an ongoing fund that's going to help students with tuition and enrich their studies. There's just an endless source of possibility when you invest in education."

Take the first step. Request a free Will planner.

Help for Today. Hope for Tomorrow...

- Every five minutes someone in Canada develops Alzheimer's disease or a related dementia.
- For every person affected, eight to 10 others are directly impacted.
- The number of Ontarians living with Alzheimer's disease and other dementias has increased 40% in the last 10 years.

By making the decision to include the Alzheimer's Society of Ontario in your Will, you can give Hope for Tomorrow – your bequest could fund:

- Dedicated provincial and national researchers who are tirelessly searching for a breakthrough cure,
- Relieve the pressure on family and friends who devote endless hours of care-giving,
- Educate decision-makers about the need for improved health care services and qualified dementia health care workers,
- Give individuals who suffer from Alzheimer's disease or dementia hope.

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL

LEAVE A LEGACY FOR FREEDOM AND JUSTICE

Rebiya Kadeer was sentenced to eight years in prison for speaking out against the persecution of the Uighurs, an ethnic minority group in China. After Amnesty International campaigned on her behalf, she received crucial medical care and was released.

After you have provided for your loved ones, please consider including a gift in your will to help Amnesty International continue to defend courageous people like Rebiya Kadeer who speak out for human rights.

With your legacy, Amnesty International will always be there to speak out on behalf of those who are being silenced, demand justice for those who have been denied it, and stand alongside brave human rights defenders and all men, women and children whose rights are being violated.

Purpose: Every day, in communities right across Canada, young, healthy cats and dogs are euthanized simply because there are not enough homes for them all. The pet over-population crisis we are currently experiencing is the result of animals that have been left un-spayed and un-neutered. Young, healthy animals are being euthanized because there are not enough homes for them all. Animal Aid accepts donations and legacy gifts and directs funds to spay/neuter programs of local animal charities. 100% volunteer run, committed to efficient and effective use of public donations and to putting money back into communities where money is being raised. Does not have paid staff or receive government funding. Relies on public donations and corporate support.

Les Amputés de guerre

« Les amputés s'entraident », une tradition

Depuis 1918, l'Association des Amputés de guerre répond aux besoins des anciens combattants amputés et, aujourd'hui encore, elle continue d'être à leur service, tout en aidant d'autres personnes amputées, parmi lesquelles on compte des enfants.

L'association accepte avec gratitude tout don ou legs testamentaire. Grâce à votre appui, elle pourra remplir ses engagements envers les personnes amputées encore très longtemps.

A gift in your will...

...brings hope to the next generation.

Did you know that arthritis is the leading cause of disability in Canada?

In fact, 4.6 million Canadians live with arthritis. It can devastate a promising career, destroy a child's eyesight and deplete a person's independence.

As Canada's principal health charity devoted exclusively to funding arthritis research and providing education, programs and patient care, The Arthritis Society is a dedicated advocate for the men, women and children who live with this disease.

The support we receive from individuals and other partners allows us to lead the way as the largest non-government funder of arthritis research in Canada by investing more than $185 million in projects that have led to breakthroughs in the diagnosis, treatment and care of people with arthritis.

With generous support through a gift in your will, or a gift of life insurance, a charitable gift annuity, or a gift of securities, you will support the next generation in their fight to end arthritis.

Your gift means new discoveries, hope for tomorrow, and a cure.

Purpose: For almost 40 years, the Canadian College of Naturopathic Medicine (CCNM) has been Canada's premier institute for education and research in naturopathic medicine. CCNM educates and trains naturopathic doctors through its rigorous four-year, full-time program, culminating in the only naturopathic degree in Canada. CCNM receives no direct funding from the government. Our financial health depends on the generosity of our supporters, who believe in helping us advance naturopathic medicine and research. Health care tomorrow can be better than health care today. CCNM is on the vanguard of this change, but to drive these changes we need your support. "Poverty.
I saw it so much in my work.
People with the biggest social issues often have the most limited resources.
It seems unjust."

Doug Bullock, MSW/83,

the area of social policy.
Now, he's honouring that commitment
by ensuring future

Purpose: Food For The Poor Canada (FFPC) is the Canadian branch of one of the largest charities in the world, with programs of close to one billion dollars worth of development and aid each year to countries in the Caribbean and Latin America. FFPC has a great network of local partners and a profound understanding of the markets it works in. Food for the Poor Canada believes in tackling poverty at the cause; we build sustainable villages for the communities who are receiving basic aid. Homes, schools, community centres, income generating projects, farming and education are delivered to support growth in the community. This combination of basic aid and sustainable development is most effective in empowering people to break the cycle of poverty.

But: Greenpeace est une organisation indépendante qui oeuvre à la protection de l'environnement. Nous faisons pression auprès des gouvernements et des sociétés pour qu'ils cessent les pratiques nuisibles. Nous négocions des solutions, pratiquons la désobéissance civile pacifique, réalisons des études scientifiques, sensibilisons le grand public et proposons des solutions de rechange écologiques.

Philanthropy and Estate Services

Centred on your priorities

The Benefits of Integrated Solutions

The most significant charitable gifts are typically part of a Will and estate plan. Philanthropy is a key priority for those who would like to include charitable giving in their estate plans. The experts at Scotia Private Client Group can help clients develop a comprehensive, integrated estate plan, aligned with their priorities.

Scotia Private Client Group is a national leader in philanthropic planning and solutions. Our Philanthropy and Estate Services extend to serving as Executor of estates and Trustee of ongoing trusts. Our clients benefit from customized, tax-efficient strategies that align their investment, retirement, philanthropic and estate plans to help ensure financial well-being into the next generation.

Philanthropic Advisory Services

As the largest provider of Philanthropic Advisory Services to private foundations in Canada, we help clients create meaningful legacies. With innovative solutions to facilitate charitable intentions, our specialists can help establish, manage and administer private foundations and donor advised funds. We also provide assistance with planned gifts to individual charities that satisfy personal, tax, and philanthropic goals.

Our focus is on sophisticated and objective planning in support of true philanthropy. Through advice, service and working with independent lawyers, accountants and other professional advisors we deliver strategies that help balance family priorities and support philanthropic goals.

Aqueduct Foundation

Aqueduct Foundation is a registered public foundation (administered by Scotiabank) with donor advised funds. Donor advised funds are personal charitable accounts that enable strategic giving in support of your various charitable interests. Through smart, flexible philanthropic planning, Aqueduct Foundation offers opportunities for tax-effective giving that is integrated into estate plans of varying complexity. Aqueduct Foundation's donor advised fund model offers unrivalled flexibility in the choice of charities and timing of gifts, including gifts of capital.

Aqueduct Foundation is committed to creating personal legacies that provide ongoing support for the donor's favourite charitable causes. Each legacy fund is named and designed to reflect the priorities of the founding individual and/or family. Donors are encouraged to include a short biographical statement to ensure their values and wishes are understood by future generations.

Will and Estate Planning

Where appointed an Executor (Liquidator in Quebec) and/or Trustee under a client's Will we can assist in developing an estate plan aligned with a client's overall goals. We will work with the client's lawyer/notary to create the Will and related documents, such as Powers of Attorney (Protective Mandate in Quebec) and trust deeds. We will maintain the documents in safe-keeping and periodically review the plan to help ensure it continues to reflect the client's needs and wishes.

We administer, settle and manage estates and trusts of varying complexity and value in our capacity as Executor and/or Trustee. In many cases, we work with designated family members to help ensure the estate is administered in a professional and empathetic manner. We can also assist Executors in fulfilling their responsibilities, providing support at a critical time, and can provide financial advice, practical support, and guidance to beneficiaries.

Philanthropy and Estate Services are provided by Scotiatrust in our Centres across Canada.

A Gift in your will...

Bring hope to the lives of women and children fleeing violence

Make a Difference With Your Gift!

Charitable Number: 10751 0059 RR0001

*Half of all women in Canada have experienced at least one incident of physical or sexual violence since the age of 16.

*On any given day in Canada, more than 3300 women along with their 3000 children are living in an emergency shelter to escape domestic violence.

Without support from individuals like yourself Interim Place could not have supported over 40,000 women and children since our doors opened in 1981.

Your gift helps women and children in closing the door on abuse and opening the door to hope.

Purpose: The Nature Trust is a conservation charity dedicated to protecting Nova Scotia's unique natural legacy, through land conservation. Together with landowners, local communities and volunteers, we have protected and cared for over 10,000 acres of outstanding natural areas, from vast coastal and freshwater wilderness to old growth forests, wetlands, lakes and critical habitat for some of Canada's most endangered species. Our network of 70 conservation sites (and growing) provides excellent opportunities for education, exploration and discovery, for today and for future generations.

UN PETIT PAS VERS UN AVENIR VERT ET SAIN

Léguez un don durable à un organisme de conservation ou de protection de l'environnement dans votre testament.

Moins de 2 % des dons versés au Canada chaque année vont à l'environnement. L'an 2017 marquera le 150e anniversaire du pays. Profitons de l'occasion pour créer des patrimoines verts dans la perspective d'un avenir propre et sain.

Patrimoine vert collabore avec des donateurs et des conseillers. Nous offrons aussi du mentorat, des ressources et de la formation destinés à insuffler force et résilience au secteur.

The results of philanthropy are always beyond calculation.

- Mary Ritter Beard

Un don dans votre testament pour...

...nourrir l'espoir de la prochaine génération.

Saviez-vous que l'arthrite est la première cause d'invalidité au Canada?

En effet, cette maladie touche 4,6 millions de Canadiens. Elle peut dévaster une carrière prometteuse, faire perdre la vue à un enfant et compromettre l'indépendance d'une personne.

En tant que principal organisme caritatif canadien du domaine de la santé qui se consacre exclusivement à financer la recherche sur l'arthrite et à offrir de l'information, des programmes et des soins aux patients, la Société de l'arthrite défend avec ardeur les intérêts des hommes, des femmes et des enfants qui vivent avec la maladie.

Grâce au soutien que des donateurs et d'autres partenaires nous apportent, nous jouons un rôle de premier plan comme le plus important bailleur de fonds non gouvernemental de la recherche sur l'arthrite au Canada, ayant investi plus de 185 millions de dollars dans des projets qui ont mené à des percées en matière de diagnostic, de traitement et de soins des personnes atteintes d'arthrite.

En nous offrant votre appui généreux au moyen d'un don testamentaire, d'un don de police d'assurance vie, d'une rente de bienfaisance ou d'un don de valeurs mobilières, vous aiderez la prochaine génération dans son combat pour guérir l'arthrite.

Votre don mènera à des percées et à la découverte d'un remède, en plus de nourrir l'espoir.

Pour en savoir plus, communiquez avec votre bureau local au 1-800-321-1433 ou visitez le site arthritis.ca.

Le don planifié, un don pour l'espoir

Planifier un don en faveur de la Société de recherche sur le cancer c'est poser un geste de générosité en soutenant une cause qui touche chacun d'entre nous.

Un don planifié vous permet d'établir la façon la plus appropriée de donner à la Société de recherche sur le cancer, et ce, sans atténuer votre niveau de vie habituel et celui de vos proches.

Voici quelques-unes des nombreuses possibilités qui s'offrent à vous afin d'appuyer le financement de la recherche sur le cancer :

- Le don testamentaire
- Le don de valeurs mobilières
- Le don de produits d'assurance-vie

Nous pouvons vous aider à planifier votre don. Communiquez avec notre service des dons majeurs et planifiés afin de connaître les avantages reliés à la planification d'un don à la Société de recherche sur le cancer.

It's a Start.

Let's say this charity is listed in Canadian Donor's Guide, Canada's only comprehensive directory of fundraising organizations... a book that goes to an audience specifically selected for their involvement in major donations and planned giving... a reference book they use throughout the year as a source of information.

Great exposure. But where's the information? Who are they? What do they do? What have they achieved? Who is the person to contact?

Next time consider a Descriptive Listing
