PUBLISHER'S NOTE

Political Engagement Necessary for Reform

Anderson Charters
Publisher, Canadian Donor's Guide

Welcome to the 25th edition of the Canadian Donor's Guide.

The purpose of the Guide remains the same as it always has been: to provide an authoritative annual directory to fundraising organizations in Canada.

Scotia Private Client Group is back for a seventh year as the Guide's sponsor. This means we continue to deliver at least 17,000 copies of our publication to key decision makers in Canada's donor community.

The Canadian Donor's Guide is published with the co-operation of the Canadian Association of Gift Planners (CAGP), the Canadian Bar Association, and Imagine Canada.

This year we introduce an expanded Editorial Section. We are able to do this by taking advantage of the Digital Edition of the 2010 Canadian Donor's Guide. This is an exact replica of the print version of the Guide that you have in front of you. You view it on a computer screen by accessing it on the Internet via our website at www.donorsguide.ca.

We have a strong lineup of contributors to this year's Editorial Section. However, in some cases their thoughtful articles and papers run to scores of pages. Our solution: provide one page in the print edition of the Guide for the first several hundred words or a summary of the article, and then insert a 'turn' to the full article by providing a link to it from the same page in the Digital Edition of the Guide.

The thread that runs through many of the Opinion pieces that we are publishing this year has to do with the limitations that Canada's legislative and regulatory framework for charities impose on them. An idea that is gathering steam is the recommendation for legislation to create social capital corporations.

As former Prime Minister Paul Martin states in an article that starts on the next page: "I think that there is much potential to be tapped by social enterprise organizations that borrow from the objectives of traditional charities on the one hand and the management principles of the private sector on the other, including, in certain cases, the need to ensure growth by showing profits and the possibility of providing a financial return on investment."

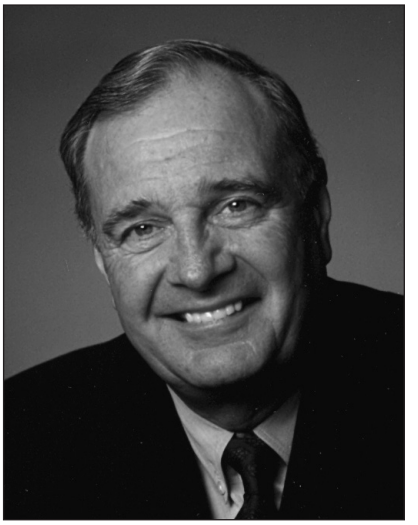

There appears to be growing consensus among opinion leaders in the sector that the rules and regulations that enable it, that govern it, and that hem it in require change. My concern: how do we assist our elected representatives to understand this and then to enact the legislation that will be required to bring about change?

Charity law in Canada is complex, largely because the regulation of charities has, over time, become entwined in this country's voluminous Income Tax Act. It is quite understandable to assume no elected Member of Parliament, or a provincial assembly, unless he or she was a tax expert before entering politics, grasps the complexities of the Income Tax Act; and therefore understands the constraints faced by registered charities, non-profit organizations that are not registered charities, and Canadians in general who wish to deliver innovative solutions to the challenges that confront us. Nor is it realistic to expect that reform in this sector is somehow top of mind for a Member of Parliament given the enormous complexity of issues with which we expect our governments to deal. It is also understandable that the impetus for change is not going to come from the bureaucracy that administers the Income Tax Act. It is not its job.

It is the responsibility of those in the sector advocating for the changes they wish to see to figure out how to convince our elected representatives that these reforms are a priority. The idealism of many young Canadians working in and through charities and volunteer groups to deal with pressing social and environmental issues is wonderful. But how many also volunteer through local riding associations of whatever political party? In fact, conventional wisdom has it that not only young people, but Canadians in general, consider party politics to be beneath them. This is unfortunate, not only because we risk a great deal if we believe safeguarding our democratic traditions and rights is the grubby work of someone else, but also because a groundswell of advocacy at a local level directly to elected federal and provincial representatives would be the surest route to reform.

Perhaps putting this edition of the Canadian Donor's Guide in the hands of every Member of Parliament and Member of Provincial Parliament or Legislative Assembly and recommending the articles in it would help. One other thought: something that is sometimes necessary in Canada to effect substantial change – a Royal Commission on the Reform of Charity Regulation in Canada.

OPINION

Paul Martin, p.c.

Unleashing the Power of Social Enterprise

Over the last 150 years, there has been a never-ending debate between those who espouse the free market on the one hand and socialism on the other. It is clear now that the free market has won out—because, at its core, it gives full flower to individual ambition and entrepreneurship and, because of this, it delivers best.

That being said, let there be no illusion. It is not the free market in pure form that has emerged triumphant. We do not live in a Darwinian economy, and no one with any sense would recommend that we do so.

The fact is that all developed countries depend heavily in one way or another on government for the delivery of public goods: universal primary and secondary school education, and public infrastructure, to cite only two examples.

Thus, few would deny today the importance of the state in providing the social inputs that enable the modern economy to grow. What is less well recognized, however, is the contribution made by another building block in our social and economic structure—the charitable sector, which plays an essential role in dealing with the unacceptable gaps in equality that arise from an intrinsic disadvantage or often from the fallout of the free market.

Indeed, the importance of the charitable, the nonprofit, and the voluntary sectors appears to be Canada's secret, a hidden truth as it were. Yet taken together, as a percentage of the population, they constitute the second largest sector in the world. They are also a huge employer, with more than two million paid workers in Canada. This is almost as many Canadians as the entire manufacturing sector and two-and-a-half times the number of workers in the construction industry. They contribute almost eight per cent of Canada's GDP—this is more than the retail industry, and more than mining and oil and gas together.

They represent as well, in so many ways, the social conscience of the country. For all of these reasons, let there be no doubt that without the work of Canada's charities and nonprofits we would be a much poorer society morally and economically. The need they fill will continue to grow and so must our support for them.

That being said, however, I believe we have barely scratched the surface of the full potential of the charitable sector in all its permutations and combinations and what it could mean to Canada's evolving society. More specifically, I think that there is much potential to be tapped by social enterprise organizations that borrow from the objectives of traditional charities on the one hand and the management principles of the private sector on the other including, in certain cases, the need to ensure growth by showing profits and the possibility of providing a financial return on investment.

"Social enterprises" are like businesses in that they trade goods and services and make money doing so. However, the latter is not their primary objective. Making money is a means to a greater end. Their major return on investment is calculated by their social or environmental return, based on a double and, in the best of cases, a triple bottom line. It is this emphasis on the deeper return that distinguishes them from the many corporations whose activities may include a social or environmental return but whose principal objective is profit.

Wherein lies the problem, you ask? It lies in the rules and regulations that govern the charitable sector. For example, simplifying its complexities somewhat, the Tax Act sets out rules for three categories of endeavor: first, taxpaying corporations and individuals; second, nonprofits, which do not pay taxes; and, third, conventional charities, which do not pay taxes and have the added benefit of being able to distribute charitable tax receipts to donors. These categories have played an important role in the growth of Canadian charitable giving. That being said, however, there is now a problem with the historic boundaries they set out in that they have not kept pace with the evolution of the social domain they seek to serve.

In broad terms, as we seek new ways of serving public needs, the traditional limits are a barrier to innovation. More specifically in the case of social enterprise, they do not take into account its potential to attract new forms of capital that would not otherwise be available.

CHARITY CHECKLIST

Working with Charities When Planning a Bequest

Malcolm D. Burrows
Scotia Private Client Group

When planning your estate, should you contact charitable beneficiaries to inform them of a bequest? Traditionally, the answer to this question has been "no". But practice is changing. Charitable bequests are becoming more common, donors more knowledgeable, and charities more sophisticated.

If you are making a charitable bequest you should, at the very least, contact charitable beneficiaries anonymously to ensure your lawyer has the correct legal name. Registered charities sometimes have an operating name that is different than their legal name. An incorrect name or designation could cause your gift to fail, which creates legal costs for your estate and trouble for your executor and other beneficiaries. The Canadian Donor's Guide is the perfect first step in this process. The basic search feature at CharityCan — www.charitycan.ca — contains all Canadian registered charities. Canada Revenue Agency also lists all registered charities online at www.cra-arc.gc.ca/tax/charities.

There is, however, more to making a bequest than spelling the name of the charity correctly. A bequest is probably the largest gift of your life so don't be shy about asking a few critical questions of your intended charitable beneficiaries. If the contemplated bequest is significant in value or central to your estate plan, arrange a meeting with the charity to ask questions in person. The following due diligence checklist will help you make your legacy gift more effective, prudent, and personally meaningful.

The Charitable Bequest Checklist

1) Use of bequests: What is the charity's policy on the use of undesignated bequests and planned gifts? Are they spent immediately or are they invested? Are they used to pay a deficit, support fundraising, or pay for the direct programs and services of the charity?

2) Accountability: Are the charity's annual report and audited statement available to the public? Will the charity send the annual report to the donor after the gift is confirmed? What percentage of annual revenue is devoted to charitable activities?

3) Gift designation: Does the charity enable donors to designate to a particular area or activity? What are purposes that are expected to be future priorities?

4) Personal endowment funds: Does the charity have an endowment that is invested to provide an annual payout for its charitable activities? Are donors able to name endowment funds with their bequest? If so, is there a minimum contribution level to establish the fund? Does the charity provide donors with financial and activity reports on individual endowment funds?

5) Privacy Policy: Does the charity have a privacy policy? Can a donor remain anonymous? If the donor is anonymous, who at the charity will know about your bequest intentions? Can the donor specify no solicitations or unwanted contact? Does the charity trade or sell names to other charities or organizations?

6) Donor recognition: Are donors of bequests and planned gifts recognized after the gifts are received? Does the charity have an optional program to recognize and involve future gift donors during life?

7) Other Types of Planned Gifts: Does the charity help donors explore tax-advantageous alternatives to bequests, such as charitable gift annuities, life insurance, and gifts of RRSP/RRIFs?

8) Staff Gift Planner: Does the charity have a staff Gift Planner or Planned Giving Officer? Does he or she have any professional designations? Has the planner adopted the Canadian Association of Gift Planners' Standards of Ethical and Professional Conduct?

9) Charity Leadership: How long has the CEO of the charity been in his/her role? What is the average tenure of staff and directors?

10) Charitable Effectiveness: Can the charity provide a concise summary of its charitable mission? Can it provide three examples of recent initiatives that have made a difference?

While the issues on this checklist will vary in importance to each person, the key consideration is how the charity deals with an inquisitive donor or advisor. Most charities appreciate passionate donors, so please, go ahead and ask tough questions. Ultimately, trust is the most important factor when making a gift of a portion of your life savings. Trust should be earned, not assumed.

CHARITABLE DONATIONS

A Summary of Tax Considerations

James M. Parks
Cassels Brock & Blackwell, LLP

OVERVIEW

Tax consequences are important in structuring charitable gifts, since proper planning can increase the benefits to the donor. The tax benefits are often a major incentive for charitable giving and should be carefully considered from the outset.

A gift to a registered charity by an individual (including a trust) entitles the donor to a non-refundable tax credit, i.e. a deduction in computing tax otherwise payable, whereas a gift by a corporation entitles it to a deduction in computing taxable income, as opposed to a tax credit. These rules are found in section 118.1 of the Income Tax Act (the "ITA") for gifts by individuals and section 110.1 of the ITA for gifts by corporations.

2010 BUDGET PROPOSALS

As discussed more fully below, in its March 4, 2010 budget, the federal government announced major changes in the rules dealing with the disbursement quota which must be met by registered charities. This will have a bearing on how or whether donors attach terms and conditions to gifts and the circumstances in which registered charities accept gifts from donors.

BASIC TAX RULES
Individuals

An individual who makes a gift to a charity is entitled to a credit against tax otherwise payable. For purposes of this summary, the references to a "charity" include generally charities which are registered by Canada Revenue Agency ("CRA"), registered Canadian amateur athletic associations, certain non-profit housing corporations, Canadian municipalities, the crown, the United Nations and certain foreign charities (including certain foreign universities).

Where the gift is less than $200, the federal tax credit is calculated at the lowest personal tax rate on the amount of the gift. Where the gift exceeds $200, the credit is 29% of the amount of the gift. A comparable tax credit is also available in calculating provincial taxes, with special rules applicable in Quebec.

An individual can claim a tax credit for a charitable gift of up to 75% of net income for the year. Any unused credit can be carried forward for five years and used to offset taxes in those years, subject to the 75% limit in each year. The limit does not apply in the year of death or the previous year. Unused credits not applied in the year of death can be used in the prior year, without any limit based on income.

The 75% limit is increased by an additional 25% of any taxable capital gain realized by the donor as a result of making a gift of appreciated capital property, plus 25% of the amount of any recapture of capital cost allowance realized on a gift of depreciable property (to a maximum of 25% of the lesser of the capital cost or the fair market value of the depreciable property).

CRA's administrative position on gifts and receipts is set out in IT-110R3 entitled "Gifts and Official Donation Receipts". In addition, useful comments are set out in a number of CRA newsletters, policy statements and consultation drafts. These newsletters, interpretation bulletins, policy statements and other information from CRA can be viewed on the CRA website at www.cra-arc.gc.ca. There is a section on the website aimed at charities and donors, called "Charities and Giving".

Corporations

A corporation that makes a gift to a charity is entitled to a deduction in computing taxable income. However, the corporation is also subject to the income limits noted above for individuals. The corporation can claim a deduction of up to 75% of its net income for the year. If the corporation makes a gift of appreciated capital property, the limit is increased by 25% of the taxable capital gain and 25% of any recapture of capital cost allowance realized on a gift of depreciable property (to a maximum of 25% of the lesser of the capital cost or the fair market value of the depreciable property).

TYPES OF GIFTS

The following are some basic features and tax consequences of certain types of gifts.

1. Gifts by Will

Gifts are often made by will, as "testamentary" gifts. The donor ("testator") states in a will that on death, property is to be given as a bequest or legacy to a specified charity or a charity to be chosen by the executors. The gift can be cash or property, such as a work of art or shares. If the testator leaves too much discretion to the executors in choosing a charity or the amount of the gift, CRA may allege the gift is made by the estate and not deemed to be made in the year of death.

Otherwise, the testator is deemed to have made the gift immediately before the date of death. Therefore, in the terminal return for the year of death, a tax credit is available in computing tax otherwise payable. Any unused tax credits in the year of death can be carried back and used to reduce taxes payable in the prior year. The credit is available to offset 100% of net income for the year of death and the prior year. This credit is of particular benefit in calculating tax otherwise payable in the year of death, since the deceased is deemed to have disposed of all capital assets immediately before death (subject to certain exceptions, such as for spousal rollovers) at fair market value, thereby realizing capital gains in the year of death.

2. Annuities

Prior to December 20, 2002 a donor could transfer cash to a charity which undertook to pay an annuity for life to the donor, or perhaps to the donor and a spouse, as long as one of them was alive. The annuity payment received by the donor would be a blend of interest and capital, and only the interest portion would normally be taxable. If the donor transferred cash to the charity in excess of the amount expected to be received over the term of the annuity, the excess was considered under CRA's administrative policy to be a gift and the charity could issue a tax receipt for the excess. CRA's policy as stated in IT-111R2 entitled "Annuities Purchased from Charitable Organizations" was not to tax any portion of an annuity payment received by a donor in such circumstances.

If the donor died earlier than expected, the charity would keep the remaining funds. If the donor lived beyond the life expectancy, the charity had to meet its commitments and might need to use other funds to do so.

Only charitable organizations can issue annuities without adverse tax consequences. Foundations can be deregistered if they incur ineligible debt obligations. Furthermore, a charity must ensure that it has authority to issue annuities pursuant to provincial laws dealing with insurance or other relevant laws. In many cases, the charity will purchase an annuity from a financial institution rather than issuing it itself, to reduce its risk of loss.

The Department of Finance announced a number of proposed changes on December 20, 2002. These proposals were modified on December 5, 2003, in response to so-called "art flip" transactions, and eventually introduced in Bill C-33 in November, 2006 and again in Bill C-10 in November, 2007, after Bill C-33 died when Parliament prorogued. Bill C-10 also died on the order paper. The proposed changes have not been enacted as at April 30, 2010. Nevertheless, CRA is administering the law as if these changes were in place, since they will be retroactive. The Department of Finance confirmed in the March 4, 2010 budget that these changes will be made.

One major change deals with the measurement of a gift where the donor receives some advantage in exchange, to deal with "split-receipting". CRA has changed its administrative policy dealing with annuities and no longer applies the administrative policy set out in IT-111R2 for annuities issued after December 20, 2002. CRA has acknowledged that its earlier administrative position has no basis in law and cannot be continued in the face of the proposed changes in the ITA. Under the proposed changes, the value of property received from a charity in exchange for a gift must be determined and that value will become the cost of that property to the charity. As a result, where an amount is transferred to a charity by a donor and the advantage received by the donor is a stream of annuity payments, the amount of the gift will be equal to the excess of the amount transferred by the donor to the charity over the amount that would be required to purchase an annuity that would provide the same payments. CRA has stated that despite the withdrawal of its administrative position, it expects charitable annuities to continue as a means of fundraising which could be more advantageous to the donor than in the past.

In an example mentioned by CRA, for a donor with a life expectancy of eight years, who actually lives for eight years and makes a cash payment of $100,000, in exchange for annuity payments of $10,000 for each of those eight years, the cost of the annuity that will pay $80,000 over eight years is $50,000. Under the former administrative practice, the donor would be entitled to a tax receipt for $20,000 in the year of the payment and would receive a total of $80,000 as annuity payments tax-free. Under the proposed changes, the donor will receive a tax receipt for $50,000 in the year of the gift, and will receive $80,000 in annuity payments, of which $30,000 will be included in income over the eight years, as blended payments.

3. Life Insurance

A charity can benefit from gifts of insurance policies in several ways. From the donor's point of view, a gift of an insurance policy allows a large donation, at a relatively small cost to the donor. CRA's administrative position on donations of life insurance policies is set out in IT-244R3 entitled "Gifts by Individuals of Insurance Policies as Charitable Donations".

A charity can purchase a life insurance policy on the donor's life on the understanding that the donor will pay the premiums directly to the insurance company. This is often supported by a pledge to pay the premiums. The charity can issue a tax receipt to the donor for the premiums paid. On the death of the donor, the charity will receive the death benefit, but it will not be a gift by the donor. The major drawback from the charity's point of view is that there is no way to ensure that the donor will pay the premiums. However, if the donor fails to pay, the charity can surrender the policy or pay the premiums out of its own funds.

Alternatively, the donor can transfer an existing policy to the charity and undertake to pay future premiums. The charity can issue a receipt for the fair market value of the gift, which may be the cash surrender value of the policy (normally only whole life or universal life policies will have a value) less any outstanding policy loans. The charity can issue a tax receipt for the premiums paid. There may be an inclusion in income of the donor on a gift of a policy if the fair market value of the policy exceeds its tax cost. CRA has acknowledged that the cash surrender value may not necessarily be the fair market value of the policy. In particular, CRA has stated that, consistent with standard valuation principles applicable to other types of property, the fair market value of a policy should be determined based on all of the relevant factors. As a result, if a qualified valuator determines that the fair market value of the policy exceeds its cash surrender value (less any outstanding policy loans) that higher amount can be shown as the eligible amount in a receipt issued by the charity. CRA has also confirmed that in determining the income that must be reported by the donor on a gift of a policy to a charity, the cash surrender value rather than the fair market value will be relevant. As a result, the donor will be subject to tax on the amount by which the cash surrender value (less any outstanding policy loans) exceeds the adjusted cost basis (a defined term) of the policy. CRA has confirmed that this will not be affected by the issuance of an official receipt by the charity reflecting a fair market value that is higher than the cash surrender value.

In some cases, if the charity is concerned that it will not be able to pay the premiums on a policy it acquires as a gift, the donor may make a further cash gift, which the charity can use to purchase an annuity to provide regular payments to pay the premiums as they become due. The cash payment should be eligible as a separate gift and the charity will generally be able to treat the annuity, along with the insurance policy itself, in a manner that does not cause problems in meeting its disbursement quota. Alternatively, the charity might rely on a promise from the donor (or another donor) to make annual donations to pay the premiums. This would create some risk for the charity. The ability of the charity to continue to pay the premiums on a donated policy may be a factor in determining the eligible amount of the gift based on the fair market value of the policy. If there is reason to believe that the policy will lapse because the charity does not have funds to pay the premiums, the fair market value of the policy may be adversely affected. A registered charity is not required to pay tax on its income and should not be adversely affected if a life insurance policy is not an "exempt" policy and as the policyholder it must report income for tax purposes. I understand some charities acquire life insurance policies that are fully paid up within three to five years, with no requirement for a medical, paying the premiums with cash donations from the donor (usually the person whose life is insured). The insurance company apparently relies on a statement of good health from the insured person.

CRA has stated that the proposals dealing with the determination of the eligible amount of a gift apply to gifts of life insurance policies. The eligible amount of a gift of a life insurance policy will be the lesser of its fair market value and the "cost" of the policy to the donor, if the gift is made within three years of the day on which the policy is acquired, under the proposed amendments discussed below. In some situations, the value of the gift could be less then expected if the policy has not been held for at least three years.

As a further alternative, the donor whose life is insured can continue to own the policy, and name the charity as the beneficiary. The donor will receive no tax relief for the premiums paid or the value of the policy, since nothing currently is being given to the charity. Under insurance law, the donor can change the beneficiary from the charity to another person. If the charity is the named beneficiary, it will receive the death benefit on the donor's death. For deaths prior to 1999, neither the donor nor the estate received a tax credit when the death benefit was paid to the charity. For deaths after 1998, the donor is deemed to have made a gift to the charity immediately before death, if the charity receives the death benefit under the policy within 36 months after death. The fair market value of the gift is deemed to be the fair market value, at the time of the individual's death, of the right to that transfer. The Department of Finance stated when these rules were introduced that "in nearly all cases" the fair market value at death of the right to transfer is "expected to be" the fair market value at death of the money that is ultimately received.

A donor can also use life insurance proceeds to pay a bequest in a will to a charity. The donor who owns an insurance policy can fund the bequest, naming the estate as beneficiary of the policy. The will would include a bequest equal to the death benefit from the insurance policy. On the donor's death, the estate would pay the bequest to the charity and receive the life insurance proceeds free of tax. The charity would issue a receipt for the amount of the bequest. The gift could then be used to reduce tax in the terminal return or in the return for the prior year, if there are excess credits. In some provinces, probate tax on the value of the proceeds passing through the estate may be a factor. A direct designation of a charity as a beneficiary will be treated as a donation in the year of death of the insured.

In some situations, a more complex arrangement might be used, involving shared benefits of some of the features of the policy or split ownership of the policy itself. Some plans involve shares of private corporations, corporate-owned insurance and share redemptions funded with insurance proceeds. This type of planning raises a number of regulatory and tax issues and requires sophisticated advice for both the donor and the charity.

4. Gifts of Residual Interests

A donor can give property to a charity, but maintain the right to use the property for his or her lifetime. Alternatively, the donor can establish a charitable remainder trust by transferring cash assets to a trust, reserving a right to receive payments for life and transferring the balance on death to a charity. CRA's administrative position on this type of gift is set out in IT-226R, entitled "Gifts to a Charity of a Residual Interest in Real Property or an Equitable Interest in a Trust". If certain conditions are met, CRA considers the donor has made a gift which will qualify for a tax receipt. This type of gift could be made during a person's lifetime or by a will. It is necessary to value the residual interest. This value will be the fair market value of the transferred property (usually cash) less the present value of the reserved interest, taking into account an appropriate discount rate, the life expectancy of the donor, current interest rates and any other relevant circumstances. This type of gift is analogous to a charitable annuity. If there is a right to encroach on the capital of the property, CRA takes the view that the value of the residual interest will be nil. A trust will generally be required for gifts of property other than real estate, so a residual interest in the trust is donated to the charity.

For example, an individual donor may wish to donate a work of art to a charity, but retain possession of the art until her death. In these circumstances, if the donor transfers title in the art to a trust of which the charity is the residual beneficiary at the time of the gift, the donor has made a gift of a residual interest in the trust, the value of which is based on the factors mentioned above. A gift of a residual interest may result in a capital gain to the donor if the value of the property exceeds its adjusted cost base, determined in accordance with a formula applied by CRA.

Using a charitable remainder trust or a gift of a residual interest often involves reliance on administrative policies of CRA and raises a number of technical issues. The Department of Finance is considering changes in the ITA dealing with charitable remainder trusts, but no amendments have been introduced. Specific advice should be sought before this type of planning is utilized.

5. Gifts of Capital Property

A person who makes a gift of capital property is deemed to have received proceeds of disposition equal to the fair market value of the property. If the fair market value exceeds the cost, a capital gain will be realized. The capital gains inclusion rate is 50%. In addition, if the property is depreciable property, there may be recapture of capital cost allowance previously claimed, which is fully included in income.

A donor can reduce capital gains tax on a gift of appreciated capital property to a charity, by designating in the tax return in the year in which the gift is made, the transfer price as an amount not greater than the fair market value of the property and not less than its adjusted cost base. The donor will then be deemed to have disposed of the property for the designated amount and considered to have made a gift of the designated amount when calculating the tax credit or deduction. This permits the donor to avoid a capital gain altogether, or create the desired amount of capital gain (for example to offset capital losses). Certain restrictions apply in the case of a non-resident individual disposing of Canadian real estate to a charity.

For gifts of securities traded on a designated stock exchange (such as shares, bonds, warrants and debentures) and mutual fund shares or units or shares or interests in certain segregated funds, the amount to be included as a taxable capital gain is nil. The March 19, 2007 budget extended this incentive to gifts to private foundations made on or after that day. It is thus more tax-efficient for the donor to give such securities directly to a charity, rather than sell them and give the proceeds to charity.

Ordinarily, an employee who exercises a stock option is taxed on a benefit equal to the difference between the fair market value of the shares at the time of exercise and the sum of the exercise price plus the amount paid for the option. In certain circumstances, the employee can claim a deduction against the stock option benefit so the taxable portion of the benefit is equal to the taxable portion of a capital gain (50% currently). Where an employee stock option is exercised for marketable securities which are given to a qualified donee within 30 days of the option being exercised and certain other conditions are met, the taxable benefit is reduced to one-quarter of the benefit. Individuals who make qualifying donations after May 1, 2006 to public qualified donees of marketable securities acquired through such stock options are not required to include any amount of the benefit. The March 19, 2007 budget extended this to gifts of such securities to private foundation on or after that day.

Taxpayers who own eligible unlisted exchangeable securities can exchange them without causing tax to be payable on a gain. There is no tax on a gain on the exchange, and the donor can receive a receipt for the donation of the listed securities received on the exchange, again without recognizing a gain. The beneficial treatment for capital gains on gifts of marketable securities applies to capital gains on the exchange (with some exceptions) of unlisted securities for listed securities where:

a. at the time they were issued, the unlisted securities included a condition allowing the holder to exchange them for the listed securities;
b. the listed securities are the only consideration received on the exchange; and
c. the listed securities are donated within 30 days after the exchange.

There are special rules for exchangeable partnership interests. These are intended to ensure that gains attributable to a reduction in the adjusted cost base of the partnership interest are not exempt.

A gift of a "non-qualifying security" to a charity will be ignored in determining the tax deduction or credit in most cases. A non-qualifying security generally includes an obligation of the donor or a non-arm's length person, a share issued by a corporation with which the donor does not deal at arm's length or any other security issued by the individual or a non-arm's length person. Specifically excepted are obligations, shares or securities listed on prescribed stock exchanges and deposits with financial institutions. If the property is disposed of within five years of receipt of the gift, or the property ceases to be a "non-qualifying security" within the five year period, the individual will be treated as having made a gift at that time. This rule does not apply to an "excepted gift", which is generally a gift of a share made to an arm's length qualified donee that is not a private foundation, and where the donee is a charitable organization or a public foundation, the donor deals at arm's length with all of the donee's directors and officers. CRA considers the relevant time when the donor must deal at arm's length with the donee is immediately after the gift. The objective of these rules is to deny a tax credit for certain types of gifts, including shares of privately held companies, subject to some relief if the donee disposes of the security within five years. The March 19, 2007 budget extended these rules where the non-qualifying security is donated to a trust of which the registered charity is a beneficiary.

Provisions dealing with "loan-back" arrangements apply where a person donates property to a charity which is not dealing at arm's length with the person and receives a loan from the charity, or is allowed to use the property donated to the charity. The fair market value of the gift is reduced for purposes of calculating the tax credit. The March 19, 2007 budget extended these rules to certain arm's length arrangements. CRA's administrative position on gifts of capital property is set out in IT-288R2 entitled "Gifts of Capital Properties to a Charity and Others" and IT-297R2 entitled "Gifts in Kind to Charity and Others."

In November, 2009, the Federal Court of Appeal confirmed that a donor of a "non-qualifying security" could claim a deduction later when the security was sold and replaced. The charity received a gift of promissory notes issued by a corporation that was controlled by the donor. It sold them to a business associate of the donor for new notes. CRA argued that the donor and the purchaser were not dealing at arm's length and the new notes continued to be "non-qualifying". Based on the facts, the court held that when the charity sold the notes and received similar notes from the purchaser, there was a "reliable basis" for treating the face value of the original notes as their fair market value at the time of the gift. CRA argued that the rules were intended to prevent a donor from claiming relief for a gift while retaining control over the funds and the charity had simply substituted notes from the purchaser for notes of the corporation controlled by the donor. The court distinguished between the "loan-back" rules and the broader rules dealing with "non-qualifying securities" and found nothing offensive in the way the charity sold the notes to permit the donor to claim tax relief. Significantly, the court found that despite the business relationship between the donor and the purchaser, they were dealing at arm's length. The court rejected an argument that the general anti-avoidance rule denied tax relief for the gift in the later year.

CRA has confirmed in an advance ruling that in appropriate situations donors can donate listed "flow-through" shares that are subject to a "monetization" arrangement enabling a charity to sell them immediately, despite securities law restrictions, to a third party that agrees to provide liquidity. Although CRA did not rule on the fair market value of the flow-through shares at the time of the donation, it seems that it is approving these types of arrangements. The fact that listed shares are subject to a holding period for securities law purposes should not result in a substantial discount of what would otherwise be the fair market value. Flow-through shares provide the shareholder with an immediate tax benefit for deductions that are renounced by the corporation on account of Canadian exploration expenses or investment tax credits, but the adjusted cost base of the share is reduced correspondingly. If the shareholder donates the shares, there is not only no tax on the resulting capital gain but also a tax credit available based on the fair market value of the shares. This is assumed to be the price at which the charity is able to sell the shares to the third party.

The deduction, the elimination of tax on the capital gain and the charitable tax credit all reduce the overall tax cost of the initial investment and the subsequent donation. The charity (or other qualified donee) is not concerned about lack of liquidity or valuation issues and in effect has a guarantee that it will be able to sell the shares immediately, receiving the agreed-upon amount from a third party. Although significant transaction costs are involved, in many cases these arrangements seem to provide a way for donors and qualified donees to achieve mutually beneficial results. Before proceeding, donors and qualified donees should carefully review the terms of the advance ruling and obtain professional advice about all aspects of the proposal.

CRA has stated that the exclusion of a flow-through share from the definition of "tax shelter" is limited to those situations in which the share has not been acquired as part of a "gifting arrangement". In some situations, a third party "promoter" obtains a tax shelter registration number. In others, donors make arrangements directly with issuers of flow-through shares and charities. In those circumstances, donors should seek advice on whether a tax shelter registration number is required, since failure to obtain a registration number could result in the disallowance of credits or deductions that would otherwise be available. Charities that expect to receive gifts of flow-through shares may wish to advise donors of the potential risks if there is no tax shelter registration number.

In a recent decision, the Tax Court of Canada treated payments under a tax shelter arrangement involving leveraged loans as an investment rather than a gift. Without relying on the proposed "split-receipting" rules, the court held that the taxpayer did not make a gift at all (even of the cash portion) to the charity because a significant benefit flowed to the taxpayer. The CRA website contains information about potential problems for donors dealing with tax shelters and other arrangements that involve the issuance of official receipts for more than a cash donation made with no strings attached. It is no secret that CRA will challenge arrangements that seem to be "too good to be true", particularly where the donor does not just pay cash or transfer property, but is involved in a more complex arrangement with a charity, a promoter or others.

In another recent decision, the Tax Court held that original drawings given to a registered charity by an editorial cartoonist were not personal-use property and were not subject to the $1,000 deemed adjusted cost base rule discussed below. In addition, as a result of a separate proceeding in civil court, gifts by the cartoonist to his wife, who made the gifts to the charity and other donees, were set aside on consent in a rectification proceeding and the gifts to the donees were treated by court order as gifts by the cartoonist himself. CRA had not permitted the cartoonist and his wife to rely on its administrative policy that permits spouses to choose which of them will claim relief for charitable donations made by one of them.

CRA has stated that where an individual owns "thin" controlling voting shares of a private corporation, under which she is not entitled to receive dividends or to participate beyond a nominal amount on winding up, but controls the corporation, in some circumstances it will treat the shares as having more than a nominal value. A gift of those shares to a registered charity could offer flexibility in dealing with the valuation issue, particularly if an election is made to treat the amount of the gift as the adjusted cost base of the shares. However, this could raise a number of other issues, including potential problems under the excess business holdings rules for private foundations (as discussed below) and "acquisition of control" issues for public foundations and private foundations.

As discussed more fully below, the proposed amendments (last introduced in former Bill C-10) will significantly change the rules for determining the value of gifts of property in many situations.

6. Gifts of Art, Cultural and Ecological Property

(i) Art

Certain gifts of inventory by an artist receive special treatment. In those circumstances, where an appropriate designation is made, an artist is entitled to a credit based on the fair market value of the property but no income is triggered on the disposition.

Artwork is generally considered to be personal-use property unless it is inventory. Personal-use property is property that is used primarily for the personal use or enjoyment and includes jewellery, clothing, furniture, and certain works of art. For purposes of calculating the capital gain or loss, the adjusted cost base and proceeds of disposition of personal-use property are deemed to be at least $1,000. This rule eases the compliance and administrative burden associated with the reporting of dispositions of personal-use property. The $1,000 deemed adjusted cost base and deemed proceeds of disposition for personal-use property will not apply if the property is acquired after February 27, 2000, as part of an arrangement in which the property is given to a charity. Therefore, where this type of property with a value of less than $1,000 is donated to a charity in those circumstances, it will no longer be treated as personal-use property, and any resulting capital gain will be taxable.

(ii) Cultural Property

A gift of certified cultural property to a designated institution will not trigger a capital gain. The donor will be allowed a credit (if an individual) or a deduction (if a corporation) for the fair market value of the property and will not be limited to 75% of income. There are special rules for determining the fair market value of cultural property. In addition, any capital gain on an object that is donated is exempt from tax. The determination is made by the Canadian Cultural Property Export Review Board and there are extensive rules for the procedures to be followed and appeals if the amount determined is not acceptable to the donor. The Board must certify the property and designate the institution.

Any unused credits or deductions can be carried forward for five years, or back one year in the event of death. Charities receiving gifts of cultural property are subject to a penalty tax in certain circumstances if they dispose of the gifted property within ten years of its receipt. CRA's administrative position on gifts by artists is set out in IT-504R2 entitled "Visual Artists and Writers", and its position on gifts of cultural property set out in IT-407R4 entitled "Dispositions of Cultural Property to Designated Canadian institutions".

(iii) Ecological Property

There are similar rules for gifts of ecologically sensitive property to the crown, a municipality or a charity that is approved for the conservation and protection of the environment. There are incentives for owners of ecologically sensitive land to protect that land while at the same time qualifying for a tax benefit. The precise nature of the conveyance of property will depend on legal issues and in some cases there may be split ownership.

There are special valuation rules for gifts of ecological property. These include gifts of the land itself and gifts of easements over the land. The use of easements provides some flexibility, permitting the owner to retain legal title while fettering its future use and preventing development, but this can raise difficult valuation issues in some cases. The fair market value will be determined by the Minister of the Environment and there are extensive rules for the procedures to be followed and appeals if the amount determined is not acceptable to the donor. As in the case of gifts of cultural property, a charity accepting a gift is subject to a penalty if it disposes of the property within ten years or changes its use without the consent of the Minister of the Environment. Under the Ecological Gifts Program, Environment Canada certifies that land is ecologically sensitive and an expert panel certifies the value.

Gains realized on gifts made after May 1, 2006 are exempt. Where gifts were made prior to that date, 50% of the gain is taxable.

7. Gifts of Inventory

Unlike gifts of capital property, gifts of inventory do not permit the donor to choose an amount between the cost of the property and its fair market value. As a result, a gift of property that is part of the inventory of a business will result in an income inclusion. While there will be a corresponding eligible amount for the gift (the eligible amount will depend on whether any advantage is received by the donor), it is frequently less advantageous to donate inventory rather than capital property. This is one of the reasons why special rules were enacted for gifts of inventory made by artists, as discussed above.

Changes introduced in the March 19, 2007 budget permit corporations to claim a deduction for gifts of medicine held in inventory to a registered charity, if the charity has received financial assistance from CIDA and uses the medicine in carrying out its foreign activities. For gifts made on or after July 1, 2008, the medicine must have been available to be used by the charity at least six months prior to its expiration date and must qualify as a drug (within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act) which meets certain technical requirements. In addition, the charity must in the opinion of the Minister of International Cooperation meet certain conditions prescribed by regulation. This limits the situations in which corporations can claim tax relief for donations of medicine from inventory.

8. Gifts to the Crown

A gift to Her Majesty in right of Canada or Her Majesty in right of a Province (a "crown gift") is subject to the same income limitation as other gifts, i.e. 75% of the donor's income for the year plus 25% of any taxable capital gain, plus an amount equal to 25% of recapture of previously claimed capital cost allowance. Consequently, crown gifts provide the same tax relief as gifts to other charities. There are separate rules for gifts made prior to 1997 to the federal or provincial crown.

For this purpose, the crown will include an agent of the crown. In early 2008, the federal government amended the Museums Act to include the new Canadian Museum for Human Rights. Gifts to that museum and the other museums listed in that Act (including, for instance, the National Gallery of Canada, the Canadian Museum of Civilization and the Canadian Museum of Nature) will all be treated as gifts to the crown.

9. Charitable Donations of RRSPs, RRIFs and TFSAs

Donations made as a consequence of a direct designation of proceeds of RRSPs, RRIFs or TFSAs to a charity on the death of an individual qualify as gifts eligible for the individual donation tax credit, if the transfer of funds from RRSPs or RRIFs to the charity occurs within 36 months of death. The transfer is deemed to be a gift made immediately before death by the individual to the charity. The fair market value of the gift is deemed to be the fair market value, at the time of the individual's death, of the right to the transfer. Since the balance in an RRSP or RRSP is treated as income in the year of death, in the absence of a rollover to a spouse, the credit for a gift to charity in the year of death will effectively eliminate the tax otherwise payable on the balance, if there is a direct designation. This is the same result as if there were a bequest by will of the amount included in income under the RRSP or RRIF, without having to determine the amount in advance. A direct designation of a charity will be treated as a donation. The same comments made above with respect to the valuation of a gift where there is a direct designation under a life insurance policy apply to direct designations of proceeds of RRSPs, RRIFs and TFSAs.

Anti-Terrorism Rules

Very broad rules in the ITA and other legislation give sweeping powers to the federal government to try to address abuses through which terrorism is funded through Canadian registered charities. Donors should be aware of these rules and carry out appropriate due diligence before making donations to organizations that may be subject to these rules. Similarly, charities should carefully consider the identity of donors, and the way in which donors have obtained funds and other donated property. Charities should review their lists of donors for organizations that may be identified as terrorist groups or affiliated with such groups or that might (even unknowingly) be assisting that type of activity. This can be of particular concern for organizations that are members of affiliated groups of charities, since one organization can be exposed for activities of another in certain circumstances. Both charities and donors would be well advised to consider these issues if there is any possibility of a terrorist connection. CRA has issued a checklist to help charities and donors identify potential problems and assist charities in developing good management practices. In addition to the ITA, the Charities Registration (Security Information) Act ("CRSIA") may be relevant. Under the CRSIA and the ITA, registration can be revoked if a charity makes its resources available, directly or indirectly, to a "listed entity" for purpose of the Criminal Code or an entity that engages in "terrorist activities" or activities that "support" terrorist activities. There are other prohibitions on funding or otherwise facilitating terrorism. More information can be obtained from The CRA website.

RECENT AND PROPOSED CHANGES

A number of changes are proposed for charities and charitable donations. These were last introduced in former Bill C-10, but are expected to be retroactive when reintroduced and eventually enacted. One significant change deals with "split receipting", under which the value of a gift will be the excess of the value of the property given over the value of any benefit or advantage received by the donor or a person not dealing at arm's length with the donor. As noted above, this is the basis for the new administrative position dealing with charitable annuities. CRA has indicated that this policy will also apply to situations in which a payment is made, for which some consideration is received from the charity, such as recognition, a small gift, membership, a meal, etc. The previous administrative practice of CRA was not supported by the law and CRA and the Department of Finance are attempting to rectify this. Under the proposals, a charity will be required to place a value on any benefit received by the donor in exchange for the payment, and issue a receipt only for the net amount. There will be some limits on the scope of this change, which will apply to gifts made after December 20, 2002.

The definition of "tax shelter" includes certain arrangements under which property is given by an individual to a charity if the tax credit claimed by an individual donor will exceed the cost of the property to the donor, or if limited-recourse debt is involved. This permits CRA to identify various tax planning techniques that have not been treated as tax shelters because the definition has not included situations in which there is a reduction in taxes payable through a tax credit, rather than a reduction in income or a reduction in taxable income.

The proposed amendments include significant changes in the rules for determining the value of a gift in kind. As a result of perceived abuses arising out of arrangements under which property was acquired at a low cost and valued at a much higher cost when donated, an arbitrary rule is proposed under which the value of the property will not exceed its cost, if the gift occurs within three years of acquisition of the property. This rule will apply regardless of the actual value of the property. In addition, if property is acquired with any expectation that it may be given during the lifetime of the owner, its value cannot exceed its cost. These rules will not apply to gifts of inventory, marketable securities, Canadian real estate, certified cultural property or approved ecological property or to gifts on death. As a result, all other gifts of capital property will be subject to these new valuation rules.

In determining the fair market value of the donated property, the intention of the donor at the time of acquisition will now be relevant. If one of the main reasons for acquiring the property was to make a gift (other than by will), in most cases the donor will have to use the acquisition cost as the fair market value at the time of the gift. For both gifts that are subject to the three year rule and gifts that are subject to the ten year rule, there will be extensive "tracing" rules to deal with transfers of property prior to the time of the gift.

These new rules will also apply to property that was acquired under what is called a "gifting arrangement" for tax shelter reporting purposes, or involving debt that the donor may not have to pay. An anti-avoidance rule will address situations in which a cash gift is made and the charity uses the cash to buy property from the donor at more than its cost. These new rules are very far reaching and unless they are changed before they are implemented, will have a very serious effect on a number of situations in which donors expect to receive credit for the value of the gift rather than its cost.

The proposals will reduce the value of the gift by any advantage that is in any way related to the gift. The scope of the wording is uncertain and it will be difficult to apply in many cases. CRA has indicated that it expects charities to undertake due diligence in establishing the fair market value based on the "cost" approach, and in determining the value of any advantage that would reduce the eligible amount of a gift.

If a donor fails to inform the registered charity of circumstances that reduce the eligible amount, despite the amount shown on the official receipts, under the proposals the eligible amount will be nil. This is a serious penalty for a donor who is prepared to gamble that an advantage will not reduce the eligible amount of the gift. Registered charities are advised to review carefully the circumstances in which gifts of property are received, when determining the eligible amount of the gift. In many cases, this will require consultations with the donor.

The proposals also deal with the rules for designation of a registered charity as a charitable organization, public foundation or private foundation and a new "control" test, based on commercial law concepts, such as arm's length and de facto control. These changes will apply after 1999. CRA has recently taken the position that the proposed rules will apply currently, without yet being enacted, because they will be retroactive.

Registered charities should include the CRA website address on official receipts, despite the fact that the new rules have not been yet enacted.

CRA can assess charities for intermediate sanctions. These give CRA the option of assessing tax or penalties rather than revoking registration, for various types of non-compliance, such as issuing improper receipts, carrying on an unrelated business (in the case of a charitable foundation or charitable organization) or carrying on any business (in the case of a private foundation), acquiring control of a corporation, conferring an undue benefit and other defaults. The rules for creating endowments, transfers between charities and the disbursement quota require charities to plan carefully, and the 2010 federal budget proposals will affect this.

Anti-avoidance rules prevent "trafficking" in unused charitable donations made by corporations. In some cases, unused deductions for previous donations have been available to a subsequent purchaser of the shares of a corporation.

Form T3010B contains public information and also assists CRA in ensuring that charities comply with the requirements in the ITA. With the introduction of intermediate sanctions and the new rules for excess business holdings by private foundations, the revised form requires additional information that will assist CRA in determining whether penalties should be assessed. CRA has announced that it will change form T3010B to reflect the changes in the 2010 budget.

For taxation years beginning after March 19, 2007, a private foundation that owns more than 2% of any class of shares of a corporation is required to report its holdings together with those of persons not dealing at arm's length with it, when filing its T3010 return for the year. Where the holdings of a foundation exceed 2% and the combined holdings of the foundation and all non-arm's length persons exceed 20%, either the foundation or the other persons (or the group collectively) is required to divest to below the 20% level. If the divestiture does not occur within stipulated periods of time, the foundation will be subject to penalties. CRA can treat non-arm's length persons as dealing at arm's length, if sufficient reasons are given.

There are transitional rules for private foundations that held shares on March 19, 2007. The period for compliance will vary depending on the size of the holdings and will range from five to twenty years. The rules are designed to encourage private foundations to complete this transition in a timely manner by denying donors relief from capital gains on donations of marketable securities for taxation years of the private foundation beginning after March 19, 2012, if it is not then in compliance with the new rules.

These rules are complex. They are apparently intended to address concerns about potential "self-dealing". Exemptions for "entrusted shares" (shares donated before March 19, 2007 on condition that the foundation retain them) exclude from the divestiture requirements certain unlisted shares held by the foundation on March 18, 2007. Although there is no divestiture requirement, these shares are taken into account in determining whether other shares of the same class are subject to the regime.

The exclusion applies to shares that meet the following criteria:

a. the share provides the foundation with an indirect interest in listed shares of another corporation;
b. the indirect interest is held through a controlled corporation (generally a corporation controlled by the foundation, a "relevant" person or a group of "relevant persons" with respect to the foundation);
c. if the foundation and those relevant persons had owned the listed shares directly, they would hold more than 20% of the listed shares of that corporation; and
d. the foundation, together with all controlled corporations, holds more than 2% of the listed shares of the listed corporation.

Extending the concept of excess holdings to shares of private corporations went further than had originally been expected and seems to be unrelated to the incentive for gifts of marketable securities. Despite the changes, these rules are still onerous and regarded by many observers as over-reacting and too broadly aimed.

There are also "look-through" rules for trusts in which a private foundation has an interest, if the trust owned the shares on March 18, 2007, rules dealing with "substituted" shares that are acquired in the course of certain tax-deferred corporate reorganizations and a remedy where a foundation owns entrusted shares which it cannot sell.

2010 FEDERAL BUDGET

As a result of lobbying by the charitable sector and others, in the March 4, 2010 federal budget the Department of Finance announced extensive changes in the disbursement quota rules for registered charities. Some basic concepts, such as "specified gift", "capital gains pool" and "enduring property" will be scrapped for taxation years ending on or after March 4, 2010. The current rules will be replaced by a fairly simple requirement that a registered charity disburse at least 3.5% of the average value of its accumulated investment assets in the preceding two years on its own charitable activities or by making grants to qualified donees. Charitable organizations with less than $100,000 of such assets and charitable foundations with less than $25,000 of such assets will not be subject to this requirement. This change will eliminate the current "80/20" expenditure rule and other more complex provisions.

There will be new rules dealing with the accumulation of capital and other compliance requirements for registered charities. Donors will no longer be required to impose restrictions on gifts to permit registered charities to retain capital and spend only the income or a portion of the income. It is not clear if the revised anti-avoidance rules will apply if a charity receives a gift from a donor on terms that restrict its ability to spend capital, but this does not appear to be intended and the rules seem to be aimed at transfers between charities that can reasonably be considered to be intended to delay making expenditures on charitable activities. However, CRA will have a great deal of discretion in administering some of the new rules. The underlying charity law and trust law concepts have not been changed and will require consideration in specific situations. Gifts made previously with restrictions that prevent the charity from spending the capital will still be restricted, despite the relief in the budget.

FEDERAL BUDGET 2010

Amendments to the Disbursement Quota Regime

Elena Hoffstein
Fasken Martineau

The Federal Budget 2010 has introduced significant changes to the disbursement quota obligations imposed on registered charities pursuant to the provisions of the Income Tax Act (Canada) (the "ITA"). These changes have been met with great interest and relief by the charitable sector, which has struggled with an increasingly complex and onerous disbursement quota regime.

1. Background

The ITA provides that registered charities must satisfy their "disbursement quota" ("DQ") in each year in order to maintain their charitable registration. The DQ is a prescribed amount that registered charities must expend each year in a charitable capacity on their own charitable activities or by way of gifts to qualified donees (generally other charities).

The existing disbursement quota regime was originally introduced in 1976 to ensure that registered charities devoted a significant portion of their resources to charitable activities. It was intended to discourage registered charities from spending excessive amounts on fundraising and from accumulating excessive capital.

Briefly, the existing DQ of registered charities, whether they are charitable organizations, public foundations or private foundations, consists of the aggregate of the following:

a. 80% of all donations receipted in the previous year;
b. 80% of all gifts from other registered charities (or in the case of private foundations, 100% of all such gifts); and
c. 3.5% of the value of all property not used in charitable activities or administration in excess of $25,000.

Certain types of property are excluded from the above-noted 80% requirement. These include:

a. "enduring property", such as gifts made subject to a trust or a direction that the capital be held for at least 10 years (also known as "ten year gifts"), bequests, and gifts of proceeds of life insurance, RRSPs and RRIFs; and
b. "specified gifts", which are a particular type of inter-charity gift that allow registered charities with disbursement excesses to assist registered charities with disbursement shortfalls. The "transferor" charity which distributes a specified gift to another charity is not be able to use the amount distributed in the satisfaction of its DQ requirement and the "transferee" charity does not have to include the amount received when determining its DQ requirement.

In addition, the concept of the "capital gains pool" allows registered charities to encroach on the realized capital gains from enduring property, i.e., 10-year gifts, to meet their 3.5% DQ obligations.

Over the years there has been much criticism of the disbursement quota regime, both for its complexity and difficulty, and for its disparate impact on registered charities. The government's commentary introducing Federal Budget 2010 notes that the impact of the existing disbursement quota regime "can vary considerably, for reasons unrelated to the manner in which a charity conducts its charitable activities." For example, the existing regime requires registered charities to either expend the bulk of the gifts for which receipts were issued or to hold the capital of such gifts for specified periods of time. As a result, the requirements of this regime have often been in conflict with the program needs and planning goals of registered charities and have been particularly difficult for those organizations whose income derived primarily from receipted donations.

The introduction by the Canada Revenue Agency (the "CRA") of a comprehensive fundraising guidance policy on June 9, 2009 (the "Fundraising Policy"), which provided registered charities with examples of acceptable and unacceptable ratios of fundraising to charitable expenditures, also complicated the existing DQ regime. The suggested fundraising ratios provided in the Fundraising Policy are as follows: (i) less than 35% fundraising expenses, little CRA concern; (ii) greater than 35% fundraising expenses, some CRA concern; and (iii) above 70% fundraising expenses, significant CRA concern and potential deregistration. The confusion arises from the fact that these percentages differ from the 80%-20% disbursement quota ratios. In addition, the introduction of the Fundraising Policy seemed to ameliorate some of the policy concerns behind the 80% disbursement quota requirement.

In July 2009, the National Charities and Not For Profit Law Section of the Canadian Bar Association submitted a Concept Paper on the Reform of the Disbursement Quota Regime (the "Concept Paper") to the Department of Finance. The CBA Concept Paper identified four specific regulatory objectives of the current DQ regime: (i) current gifts disbursement; (ii) anti-accumulation; (iii) efficiency; and (iv) fundraising efficiency.

LIFE INSURANCE

Potentially More Attractive to Donors

The donation of a life insurance policy or the proceeds of life insurance offers a donor an opportunity to leave a significant legacy to a favourite charity for a relatively small payment. Recent policy changes by the Canada Revenue Agency ("CRA") have made the donation of a life insurance policy even more attractive.

Background: Split-receipting rules

The "split-receipting" rules that were introduced in 2002 have provided opportunities for charities to receipt transfers of property that would not otherwise have been considered gifts. Prior to the introduction of the split-receipting rules, a charity was unable to issue a tax receipt for a gift of property where the donor still retained an interest in or would otherwise benefit from the gift.

Under the new rules, a charity can issue a tax receipt in circumstances where property is received but the donor retains a benefit. The specific rule provides that a charity must issue the receipt for the "eligible amount" of the gift. Eligible amount is defined to be the fair market value of the property gifted less any "advantage" received by the donor. Advantage is defined very broadly to be any benefit received in the past, currently or in the future, by the donor or someone dealing at non-arm's length with the donor as a result of the gift.

Donations of life insurance policies

The new split-receipting rules have had a significant impact on donations of life insurance products. For example, "split dollar" or "shared ownership" insurance arrangements are now receiptable. These are arrangements whereby the donor gifts his or her ownership interest in the death benefit portion of a universal or whole life insurance policy to a charity while maintaining the investment portion for himself or herself. The donor pays the entire premium, and, under the split-receipting rules, obtains a receipt from the charity for the portion of the premium attributable to the death benefit. A valuation of the portion of the premium that relates to the gift to the charity is required in order to determine the amount of the receipt.

Over the years, the CRA has been asked about determining the division of the premium between the death benefit and the investment portion and has always declined to provide guidance because it is a valuation issue. CRA has always maintained that questions of value are questions of fact on which it will not rule. When a donor and charity enter into a split dollar arrangement an actuary should be consulted to determine the amount that can be receipted.

Valuation of insurance policies for donation purposes

Another significant change, which is arguably a result of these rules, relates to the CRA policy shift on valuing a life insurance policy for donation purposes. In 2007, the Canada Revenue Agency announced a significant shift in its policy on determining the value of an existing life insurance policy donated to a charity.

Until the change in policy, when a donor transferred an in-force policy to a charity, the charity would issue a receipt equal to the cash surrender value (less any outstanding policy loan) at the time of the gift; subsequent payments of premiums by the donor would also qualify as a charitable gift. If the policy had no cash surrender value at the time of the gift, such as would be the case with a term-to-100 policy, no receipt would be issued for the donation of the policy, though receipts would be issued for premiums paid by the donor after the transfer to the charity.

In late 2007, the CRA announced at the Roundtable of l'Association de planification fiscale et financière (APFF), and reiterated at the Conference of Advanced Life Underwriters Roundtable (CALU) in May, 2008, that the charitable receipt to be provided by the recipient charity for the donation of an insurance policy should be calculated using the "fair market value" of the policy taking into account the factors listed in paragraphs 40 and 41 of CRA's Information Circular 89-3: "Policy Statement on Business Valuation."

The factors set out in these paragraphs include, in addition to the cash surrender value:

1. the policy's loan value;
2. the face value of the policy;
3. the state of health of the insured and his/her life expectancy;
4. conversion privileges;
5. other policy terms, such as term riders, double indemnity provisions, and
6. replacement value of the policy.

The Circular also indicates that where the death of the life insured is "imminent" and it is proper to consider this factor in valuing a policy, the value may be greater than the policy's cash surrender value.

The transfer of the policy by the donor to the charity will generally be a taxable event. The proceeds of disposition of the insurance policy by the donor will equal the value of the policy at the time of the transfer and to the extent that the proceeds exceed the adjusted cost basis of the policy, the donor will have an income inclusion. The CRA confirmed in its response at the CALU Roundtable that for purposes of determining the proceeds of disposition of the policy to the donor for these purposes, the "value" of the policy is its cash surrender value, as provided in the Income Tax Act (the "Act"), and not the fair market value as determined for receipting purposes. The amount included in income by the donor as a result of the transfer would be the cash surrender value less the adjusted cost basis of the policy – and hence in the right circumstances, the value of the receipt could be significantly greater.

A valuator or actuary must be consulted in order to determine the fair market value of the donated policy. The receipt would be issued for the eligible amount of the donation – i.e., the fair market value of the policy, less the amount of the advantage if any.

In 2003 the Ministry of Finance attempted to limit the tax benefits from "buy-low, donate-high" charitable donations made under tax shelter and other arrangements. This included recent amendments to the Act that could be relevant to the issue of what is the appropriate receipt amount for donations of life insurance.

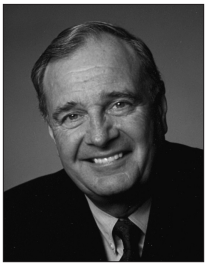

Proposed subsection 248(35) of the Act limits the fair market value of the gift for receipting purposes in certain circumstances – namely: (i) where the gifted property was acquired by the donor less than three years before the date of the gift, and (ii) where the property was acquired less that ten years before the date of the gift and "it is reasonable to conclude that, at the time the taxpayer acquired the gifted property, one of the main reasons for the acquisition was to make the gift."

Proposed subsection 248(37) lists several types of property that are excluded from the application of 248(35), including inventory, real property in Canada, cultural property and certain shares. Life insurance policies are not so excluded. The CRA confirmed at the 2009 Canadian Life and Health Insuance Association (CLHIA) Roundtable that 248(35) of the Act would apply to gifts of life insurance donated to a charity.

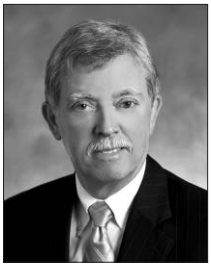

Despite the potential application of proposed subsection 248(35) in certain situations, the new CRA position on the valuation of in-force life insurance policies can make gifts of life insurance potentially more attractive to donors from a tax perspective, especially older donors who may be in poor health. Charities should ensure they have policies and procedures in place to accept and receipt in-force life insurance policies, as it is ultimately the responsibility of the charity to issue the receipt for the correct amount.

Avoid Tax Shelter Gifting Arrangements

Agence du revenu du Canada

Despite numerous warnings from the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA), some Canadian taxpayers and registered charities continue to participate in tax shelter gifting arrangements. Donors as well as charities should be wary of promoters who encourage donating to a charity through a tax shelter gifting arrangement.

What is a tax shelter gifting arrangement?

A tax shelter gifting arrangement typically promises you tax savings greater than the cost to participate in the scheme. Participants invest a small amount of money and receive a tax receipt for an amount several times higher than what they actually spent.

Don't these arrangements benefit registered charities?

On average, the CRA finds that the participating charity keeps very little of the funds involved—often as low as 1%. The majority of the money usually finds its way into the hands of the promoters and other related parties. Furthermore, a registered charity that participates in a tax shelter gifting arrangement risks losing its registered status.

Should I participate in a tax shelter gifting arrangement?

You should be aware that the CRA has been reassessing individual donors to disallow or reduce the amount of donations claimed from these arrangements. Every audit of individual donors completed to date has led to a reassessment of their income tax return, which resulted in taxes owing, plus interest.

For more information on tax shelters and how to donate wisely to registered charities in Canada, go to www.cra.gc.ca/donors or call 1-800-267-2384.

Malgré les nombreux avertissements de l'Agence du revenu du Canada (ARC), des contribuables et des organismes de bienfaisance enregistrés canadiens continuent de participer à des arrangements relatifs à des dons utilisés comme abris fiscaux. Les donateurs et les organismes de bienfaisance devraient se méfier des promoteurs qui encouragent les dons aux organismes de bienfaisance par le biais d'un arrangement relatif à des dons utilisés comme abris fiscaux.

Qu'est-ce qu'un arrangement relatif à des dons utilisés comme abris fiscaux?

Un arrangement relatif à des dons utilisés comme abris fiscaux vous promet habituellement des économies d'impôt supérieures à ce qu'il en coûte pour participer au stratagème. Les participants investissent un petit montant d'argent et reçoivent un reçu officiel d'une valeur plusieurs fois supérieure à ce qu'ils ont réellement déboursé.

Ces arrangements ne profitent-ils pas aux organismes de bienfaisance enregistrés?

Habituellement, selon l'ARC, les organismes de bienfaisance participants conservent une très faible portion des fonds impliqués – souvent aussi faible que 1 %. La plus grande partie de l'argent se retrouve généralement entre les mains des promoteurs et des autres parties intéressées. De plus, un organisme de bienfaisance enregistré qui participe à un tel arrangement risque de perdre son enregistrement.

Devrais-je participer à un arrangement relatif à des dons utilisés comme abris fiscaux?

Vous devriez noter que l'ARC a établi de nouvelles cotisations pour des donateurs afin de refuser ou de réduire le montant des dons réclamés provenant de ces arrangements. La vérification de chaque donateur accomplie à ce jour a entraîné une nouvelle cotisation ayant abouti à des impôts dus, plus intérêts.

How Much Overhead

What are appropriate overhead costs for a Canadian registered charity? 'Overhead' can be defined as the ongoing expenses of a charity that cannot be directly attributed to any specific charitable activity, but may still be necessary for the charity to function.

With the elimination of the 80/20 expenditure requirement in the 2010 Federal budget many Canadians are asking how to evaluate charities and which ones are deserving of support. One of the indicators that is suggested is 'overhead.' But is this is a good indicator of the efficiency and effectiveness of a charity?

Some may also include in overhead the costs of fundraising. In 2009 the Charities Directorate of the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) released its Fundraising Guidance and it sets out expectations for registered charities with respect to fundraising. This article will focus on the administration part of overhead and not on fundraising. Anyone interested in the fundraising issue should review the Guidance. It is especially important that staff and volunteers who are involved with fundraising, governance, or completing the T3010B (the annual filing to CRA that every registered charity is required to submit to maintain registered charity status) read the Fundraising Guidance. However, the Fundraising Guidance is not, and does not purport to be, a comprehensive tool to evaluate the effectiveness of a charity generally, as it only deals with fundraising conduct, practices, ratios and allocation.

The CRA discusses administration in the guide to the T3010B called Completing the Registered Charity Information Return :

Line 5010 – Enter the part of the amount of line 4950 that represents management and administrative expenditures. This includes all expenditures related to the overall management and administration of your charity. Other examples of expenditures you should include here are the cost of:

- holding meetings of the board of directors;
- accounting, auditing, personnel, and other administrative services;
- purchasing supplies and equipment, and paying occupancy costs for administrative offices; and
- applying for grants or other types of government funding, and/or for gifts from other qualified donees (usually foundations).

Some expenditures can be considered partly charitable and partly management and administration, such as salaries and occupancy costs. In these cases, it will be necessary to divide the amounts accordingly between lines 5000 and 5010. How you account for these expenditures should be reported throughout your charity's return on a reasonable and consistent basis.

In the United States some services have ranked charities based on the percentage spent on 'charitable activities' or the 'mission.' One reason that these ratios are popular is that it is a calculation that involves total expenditures and total amount spent on charitable work. Seemingly this is an easy calculation to make. It certainly is easier to work out than whether a charity is 'effective.' While overhead ratios are interesting, these ratios usually hide a lot more than they reveal.

The biggest problem with relying on overhead is that the numbers are very unreliable. Most charities are run by well meaning volunteers. They often do not properly understand the distinction between administration and charitable activities. Sometimes they include obviously charitable work in administration, but more often than not they include administration in charitable activities. This, more than any other factor, can account for the differences in overhead numbers. Even if volunteers or staff understand the distinction, mistakes are made on the T3010 filings. Sometimes further mistakes occur when CRA inputs the information. In addition to these differences, there is not as much consistency in accounting standards relating to charities as there should be.

It is fair to say that two charities could be treating the same expense very differently. About two-thirds of registered charities identify themselves as having no fundraising costs, and about a one-third as having no management and administration expenditures. According to the T3010 data, most charities do not spend a dime on professional services, which includes accounting and legal work.

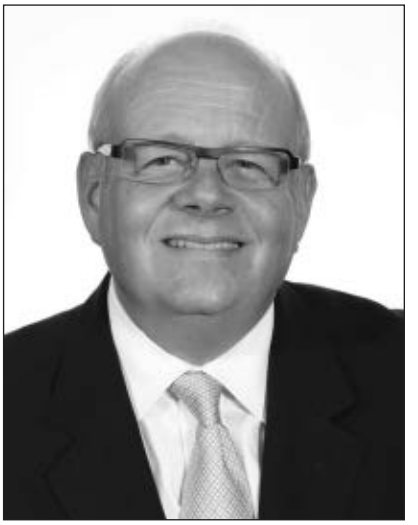

The problem with relying on such a simple indicator is that you can easily be very wrong and the results can be pretty awful. Unfortunately, large charity scams often have great 'ratios,' either because they count non-charitable expenditures as charitable or because they inflate the fair market value of the work that they do, or both. A group that claims to be very efficient, spending 95% on charitable activities, and is being lauded by the media, may in fact only be spending less than 1% on charitable activities.

Talking to the Next Generation

Evan Thompson
Thompson, Wiley + Associates

Between their children's sports practices, school projects, and hanging out with friends, organizing a family meeting can be a challenge for many parents. It can be fun getting together to plan a summer holiday, or to talk about university choices in the fall. But when it comes to money and related topics such as inheritance and long term financial planning, parents sometimes aren't sure where to begin. Now, thanks to the increasing popularity of philanthropy among young people and their parents, both groups find they have much to talk about when charitable giving comes up in discussion.

Money does not come with instructions

Most parents want their children to appreciate the value and role of money in their lives as early as possible. They also want them to be able to take charge of their lives as independent, confident individuals. "Money does not come with instructions" is a familiar and appropriate phrase here.

As a result, perhaps one of the greatest gifts to a beneficiary is the knowledge to use his or her inheritance, regardless of its size, responsibly, and to the benefit of himself and others. Awareness of the value of money, both emotionally and financially, can start at an early age with open dialogue between children, their parents and their trusted advisors about what money means to them and how they would like to share it.

Talking about philanthropy can bring families closer

More Canadian parents are discovering that conversations with their children about strategic philanthropy go far in helping them become aware not only of the implications of wealth but of the non-financial rewards of managing it responsibly. Talking about philanthropy can bring families closer.

In the United States, studies confirm that young donors give about as much as older donors. "Community hours" are eagerly earned by high school students as a condition of graduation, and their choices about how to 'give back' are as varied as the participants themselves. In Canada, for example, a recent survey conducted by Mackenzie Financial showed that 93 per cent of teens aged 13-19 have been involved in philanthropic activity; a stunning number for such a young age group.

Inheritances that will enhance, not complicate lives

According to The Canadian Inheritance Study conducted by Decima Research in 2006, Canadians born between 1943 and 1960 (the Baby Boomers) will inherit $1 trillion over the next two decades. Less than 3 per cent say they will be unable to leave an inheritance due to fluctuations in the economy.

The Decima study shows that 80 per cent of Boomers have not spoken with a financial advisor about what to do with their inheritance. If this flow of sudden wealth is to enhance lives rather than complicate them, it is important that beneficiaries and their children have a clear vision of their life goals and how newfound wealth can help them realize those goals.

Donors are becoming more strategic in their approaches to charitable giving, and need increasingly sophisticated assistance from financial professionals to explore various options that will be of mutual benefit to them and to the receiving charity. They are also expressing a deep interest in imbuing their heirs with a philanthropic spirit.

Advice from trusted advisors is essential

As strategic philanthropy becomes more mainstream, wealthy families are seeking more advice from their financial advisors. This advice is not purely financial in nature, because a family's decision to engage in philanthropy is multifaceted and is meant to serve several goals. An understanding of these goals is essential for advisors to deliver on their promise of holistic wealth management and to become a trusted advisor to the family.

Some boomer parents who are relying on inheritances to see their way to financial security may not want to let even a small amount of the inheritance go. An empathetic and trusted advisor may be able to reverse this view by emphasizing not only the tax efficiencies that come with astute charitable giving, but how working to choose a cause or charity can bring families closer together. Becoming involved in the family's philanthropy is also a way for advisors to engage the junior generations and to build relationships with the future owners of the family's assets.

Other reasons for financial advisors to consider offering philanthropic support services to their clients include:

- Providing a way of differentiating their practice from others who are more transactional in their approach.
- Creating deeper and longer-term relationships with their clients, which is more satisfying for both the client and the advisor.

Fundraiser with the Human Touch

I love anniversaries. I love the fun and the spirit of the celebrations. I also love how anniversaries help us look back on the past – to our shared histories and experiences, to values that have shaped our lives, and sometimes, to new discoveries.

I'd like to first salute the 25th anniversary of the Canadian Donor's Guide, which has grown to become a key resource for caring Canadians looking to support charitable causes across the country. I'd also like to salute another anniversary that Canadians have recently been celebrating: the centenary of the birth of one of Canada's most beloved humanitarians and one of our greatest fundraisers – Dr. Lotta Hitschmanova (1909–1990).

Dr Lotta, as she came to be known, was born in Prague, Czechoslovakia to Jewish parents who perished in the Holocaust. An outspoken critic of the Nazis, Lotta fled to Canada as a refugee in 1942. As she put it:

> "[I was] exhausted, with a feeling of absolute solitude in an entirely strange country...I came with $60 in my pocket. I had an unpronounceable name. I weighed less than 100 lbs, and I was completely lost."

And yet, just three years later, in 1945, Lotta had become the founder of the Unitarian Service Committee (USC Canada), to whose mission she would devote the rest of her life.

Pierre Trudeau paid tribute to her "life of selfless service to others." Countries from around the world – France, Greece, India, Korea, Lesotho – honoured Dr Lotta for her ground breaking contributions to international development and social justice. And in Canada, she was made a Companion of the Order of Canada, and was recognized as one of Canada's founders by the Canadian Museum of Civilization, for helping to mould "the country's social, economic and spiritual character."

Much has been written about Dr Lotta the humanitarian – and the debt we all owe her for helping make Canada the caring society it has become – and rightly so. Less well known is that Lotta was perhaps Canada's greatest fundraiser – indeed, she wrote the book on fundraising long before there were professional fundraisers, or any fundraising books at all.

Lotta developed three ingredients essential to all successful fundraising:

1. a clear identity that made her and her organization instantly recognizable,
2. a clear and compelling message that resonated strongly with her audiences; and
3. a hard-to-define 'personal touch' that she brought to all encounters and communications with supporters.

Corporations and charities spend millions of dollars creating and perfecting their images, their identities, their 'brands'. But before there were brands, there was Lotta. Everyone knew her. Everyone recognized her uniform, her Czech accent, even her street address!

It is hard for people who did not grow up in the 1940s, 50s, 60s or 70s to comprehend just how strong Lotta's presence was in Canadian society during those years.

As a woman from North Hatley, Quebec recently told me, "We always knew when it was time to return to school because Lotta Hitschmanova would come on the CBC every weekday before the 1 o'clock news to say who she was – from USC – and to support her by sending money to 56 Sparks Street, Ottawa."

In this age of branding, messaging and spin, Lotta never forgot what was most important. Yes, she made great use of her voice and her uniform; but ultimately it was her heart, and the sincerity of her message that created that lasting impression among Canadians.

Lotta was a tireless campaigner, crisscrossing the country for months on end. In an era before CNN news flashes, or other ways of hearing what was going on in the rest of the world, Lotta vividly brought that world right into the church halls and living rooms of Canadians across the country. She made people care and she mobilized a whole generation to take action and help.

Lotta was a journalist by training, and had a gift for telling stories and for bringing out the human element in all of her work. As her biographer, Clyde Sanger, noted, "She could talk to young children as effectively as she did to elderly farmers, who offered her boxcars of wheat and remembered the USC in their wills."

Her message was always compelling, and stuck in people's memories decades after they had first heard her speak. "It was Lotta Hitschmanova who shaped my values as a Canadian, and the type of Canada I believe in." says Joan Baxter from Tatamagouche, Nova Scotia, a Canadian author on African issues. "She helped give us our identity."

Lotta was ahead of her time in terms of donor cultivation and stewardship. She instilled a profound sense of friendship and loyalty among supporters.

GIFT PLANNING

Sophia E. Dunkley, B.A., LL.B.
Scotia Private Client Group

Steps to Planning Your Gift

You are committed to or have thought about making a significant gift to your favourite charity or charitable cause. You have often heard about the benefits of financial planning, tax planning and estate planning—planning is an opportunity to take control of your assets and to proactively work towards your goals. Planning your charitable gift is a complementary, integrative piece in the planning process.

The tax incentives provided by the Income Tax Act (Canada) allows you to shift your obligatory contribution to society from taxes collected to charitable giving. To maximize your impact on the good works carried out by the charitable sector and the associated tax benefits, a well-structured charitable plan is essential.

Determining Your Charitable Interests and Motivation

- Creating your personal or family legacy
- Making a gift in memory of family or a loved one
- Benefiting a specific charity or cause in a meaningful way
- Honouring institutions, programs, and sectors that have significantly impacted or contributed to your life

Once you have determined your motivation for giving and where your charitable interests lie, you can begin to look at some tools that will assist you to discover the right charitable "fit": Canada Revenue Agency's lists of charities, the Canadian Donor's Guide, CharityCan (www.charitycan.ca) Imagine Canada, Canada Gives (www.canadagives.ca), and Community Foundations of Canada to name a few.

Contacting the charity directly and speaking with staff about the charity's mission, program and achievements is a good way for you to better connect with the charity. As well, it will inspire trust and confidence in your charitable giving decisions.

What if you do not want the charity to be aware of your gift? In this case, working through a professional advisor such as a lawyer, accountant or philanthropic advisor will assist you in obtaining further information about the charity while remaining anonymous to the charity. Your anonymity can be maintained until such time as you confirm the gift or your executor distributes your estate; alternatively, it can be maintained in perpetuity—the choice is yours.

Assessing Your Individual, Family and Other Needs/Issues

Your capacity to give will be decided in part by other factors in your life: your individual needs, your family needs, your financial goals, your tax liability position, and your estate plan needs.

Your individual needs may include and may be affected by:

- Your net worth (annual income level, the number of working years remaining, total assets and investments, financial obligations and liabilities)
- Your cost of living / capacity to give ratio

Q. Can you commit to a donation of 10%, 25%, 40% or more of your net worth?

- Your retirement plans and the cost of such plans

Q. Will you require additional income in your retirement years, will your income level decrease as a result of retirement, or will you need to maintain a fixed income stream?

- Personal goals and the cost of such goals

Q. Do you plan on making a significant purchase or outlaying a significant amount of your cash/assets (e.g. purchasing a second home or cottage, helping your children or grandchildren purchase their own home or attend school, doing extensive travelling, retiring early)?

Your family needs are likely directly related to your dependents. If you have a young family, much of your after-tax dollars are going towards the care and maintenance of your dependents. Or, you may have elderly parents for whom you are providing care directly or through a retirement home or hospice. Perhaps you are providing financial support to a sibling or niece/nephew.

In the event that you have a Will and an estate plan, or are in the process of making changes to those documents, you will need to be cognizant of your commitments as stated in your Will and estate plan, as well as your ultimate tax liability (deemed disposition of assets upon death). Generally, you will want to ensure that your family is taken care of, and that you have minimized your tax liability and have maximized your tax credits in relation to your final income tax return.

Other concerns/issues may include:

- Sale of a business
- Redemption of shares or transfer of business interests
- Succession planning (business interests, professional practice etc)

Working With Your Professional Advisors

Professional advisors are:

- Lawyers
- Accountants
- Investment and portfolio managers
- Financial planners
- Philanthropic advisors*
- Family advisors

Your professional advisor can assist you in determining how to integrate your charitable giving plan with your estate, business, tax and financial plans and how to balance your personal and family needs.

Your professional advisor can also participate in any charitable giving discussions that you are having with the charity. Often, the philanthropic advisor does not have complete information about your financial situation or your personal goals. Conversely, the professional advisor may not have specific knowledge about charitable giving and the charitable giving options available to you. Including your professional advisor in your philanthropic discussions can facilitate the charitable gift planning discussion and ensure that the right solution is achieved.

Structuring Your Gift

There are numerous ways for you to structure your gift. Choosing one structure over the other will depend on your level of involvement, whether your goals are long-term or short-term, and the level of your giving. In general, your options are:

Giving directly to charity

- Annual giving
- Pledge (annual, quarterly or monthly commitment over a period of time)
- Endowment fund

You can establish your own named endowment fund to fulfill a specific purpose of the charity, or you can you add funds to an existing general or specific endowment. Endowments are typically held on a long-term basis (i.e. the life of the donor + 50 years after of his/death) or in perpetuity. The capital is preserved and the income generated from the investments pay for the charitable purpose or use for which the endowment was established.

Establishing a donor advised fund

You can place your assets in a segregated fund account held at a

- Community foundation
- Public foundation
- Financial institution

An advised fund allows you to set up your own "endowment," which is administered and the investments managed by the institution/foundation, but for which you can recommend annually the grants of income (and in some cases, grants of capital) to charitable beneficiaries. Some donor advised fund providers have the ability to accept complex gifts, including charitable remainder trusts, charitable gift/insured annuities, and real estate.

Establishing a private foundation

In the case where you have long-term philanthropic goals that you and/or your family would like to directly control through charitable granting decision, a private foundation may be an ideal charitable structure. In order for your private foundation to be sustainable and achieve its charitable purposes, a significant contribution is required either in lump sum and maintained in an endowment, or through meaningful annual contributions.

The private foundation can be an ongoing legacy of the family, whereby younger generations of the family can succeed the original founders and continue the charitable work envisioned. Also, a private foundation can be succeeded by a corporate trustee or other service provider.

Individuals and corporations who donate to private foundations are eligible for tax receipts. Donated funds are sheltered in the private foundation on a tax free basis due to the foundation's exempt status.

Funding Your Gift

- Cash, including pledges
- Gifts of public securities, exchangeable shares and private company shares
- Bequests
- RRSP/RRIF (Direct) Designations
- Life Insurance
- Charitable Gift Annuity / Charitable Insured Annuity
- Real Estate
- Other tangible gifts, including art work, cultural property etc.

Achieving Your Goals

Now that you have gone through the steps of planning your gift, you can begin to enjoy the benefits of your gift:

- the legacy that you have created, or will create;
- the creation of a family-based philanthropy that future generations can be involved with;
- the recognition and/or acknowledgment that you receive from the charity and those who benefit from the charitable program of the charity;
- the satisfaction of seeing your gift in action;
- the knowledge that your gift has made or will make a significant impact on society;
- the deeper and more meaningful connections with a grant recipient, charity or a charitable cause;
- the balancing of your personal, family, and philanthropic goals
- the reward of personal engagement;
- and more.

CHARITABLE PLANNING OPTIONS

Concise summaries available

Joshua E. Thorne
Scotia Private Client Group

Charitable giving is a growing priority for many Canadians. With smaller families than past generations, opportunities increase to consider current and future community needs by including important charities in financial and estate plans.

Planning your gift can take advantage of charitable tax incentives and it can be done to coincide with tax events from the disposition of assets, lifetime events, and your overall financial and estate plan.

Working with your team of advisors, you may consider a number of approaches to achieve your philanthropic vision.

Scotia Private Client Group has produced a series of concise brochures to explain the key features of some of the more important charitable gift planning options. Below is a thumbnail sketch of the content of some of these brochures. You may access the full brochures by going to this page in the Digital Edition of the Canadian Donor's Guide at www.donorsguide.ca and clicking on the appropriate link.

Charitable Bequests

A gift in your will is the most common future funded charitable gift plan. Easy to establish during your estate planning process, you may name one or more charities as a specific, contingent, or residual beneficiary with an appropriate clause in your will. The use of codicils provides you some flexibility to make amendments to your will should your charitable objectives change before you are ready to draft a new will. http://www.donorsguide.ca/Bequests.htm

Gifts of RRSP/RRIFS

Canadian have an estimated $1.1 trillion invested in registered savings and income plans. Yet these are among the highest taxed assets at death when the plan is de-registered with its full value taken in as income. Naming charities as beneficiaries is a simple way to efficiently pass this asset to charities of your choice, while reducing your estate administration costs and protecting your charitable intentions from potential challenges. http://www.donorsguide.ca/RRSP/RRIFs.htm

Gifts of Public Securities

The 2006 Federal Budget eliminated capital gains taxes when gifts of public securities are donated to charities. This provision makes donating stocks, bonds, income trust units, mutual fund units, flow-through shares, and employee stock options very attractive options for donors considering both gifts during their life time and through their estate plans. There are four brochures on this topic.

- Tax-Effective Donations of Public Securities – http://www.donorsguide.ca/Securities.htm
- Employee stock options – http://www.donorsguide.ca/Options.htm
- Exchangeable Shares –http://www.donorsguide.ca/Exchangeable.htm
- Gifts of Flow-through Shares – http://www.donorsguide.ca/Flowthrough.htm

Gifts of Life Insurance

Life insurance is one of the most flexible planning tools to provide income and asset protection for our loved ones. It can also provide significant planning opportunities when incorporated into our charitable giving plans. A gift of life insurance can leverage your charitable dollars to maximize the ultimate benefit to your charities. There are two brochures on this topic.

- Donations of Life Insurance – an Overview http://www.donorsguide.ca/LifeInsurance.htm
- Donations of Existing Life Insurance Policies http://www.donorsguide.ca/Existing.htm

Charitable Gift Annuities

Given recent investment market volatility, life annuities are increasingly popular ways to provide tax-efficient income guaranteed for life. The Charitable Gift Annuity combines the "life income" of the annuity with a charitable gift supporting your favourite charity. – http://www.donorsguide.ca/GiftAnnuities.htm

Charitable Insured Annuities

A charitable insurance annuity builds on the insured annuity plan which provides a stream of tax efficient income for personal expenses and a second stream of income to pay life insurance premiums for a future payout of death benefits for your estate. By naming a charity as owner and beneficiary of the life insurance policy, you enjoy additional tax savings during your life time while securing a significant future charitable gift with the death benefits. – http://www.donorsguide.ca/InsuredAnnuities.htm

Private Foundations

Establishing a Private Foundation, often referred to as a Family Foundation, is a meaningful way for some Canadians to structure their philanthropy. Along with consideration of charitable purposes, the appointment of trustees or directors, and managing the investment and administrative duties, appropriate consideration needs to be given to the timing and type of assets contributed at inception or in the future to the private foundation. Excess Business Holdings rules are one such consideration. – http://www.donorsguide.ca/PrivateFoundations.htm

Making Do No Longer Working

A crisis still exists for Canada's charities, even as the economy begins to right itself.

The economic recover is largely "jobless." Even when jobs are created, they are not picking up all those displaced, possibly permanently, from the manufacturing sector. Families and communities across the country are finding times exceedingly hard and they are turning to local charities for help in increasing numbers.

These charities know government's capacity to help is limited. They knew their governments could not help them before the economic crisis hit, and now these same governments are saddled with large and growing debt, further complicating how they manage government's declining share of Canadian economic activity (from 21.5% of GDP in 1992 to 17.1% in 2007). Over the years, tax reductions have seriously weakened the capacity of government to meet its ongoing obligations and reduced its ability to respond to communities in trouble. Government is not coming to the rescue of charities and their communities any time soon.

Charitable giving may rebound this year with the rise in stock and real estate market values, but it may not reach those who need it most. Increasingly, it is big donors who give, and they have been giving to big philanthropy. Nine per cent of donors give 62 per cent of charitable gifts. Between 2000-2004, hospitals and universities increased their share of receipt of charitable donations from 6.2 per cent to 9.6 per cent. These big institutions, with their fundraising departments and gift planners, are much better positioned to attract large gifts than the local women's shelters, neighbourhood centers or food banks on the front lines of the economic fallout. The worry is that a weaker economy may accelerate, not diminish this trend in charitable giving, as underemployment among middle and low income Canadians further decreases their ability to give.

Increasingly, charities that can, are trying to earn their own income, to become more innovative and entrepreneurial. Most people would see this as a good, even smart thing to do. They expect their charities to try out new models for doing their work. Unfortunately, the Canada Revenue Agency, the charity regulator, is not so flexible as they administer an outmoded charitable regime and find themselves regulating for the century past not the century ahead.

Our charity law dates from Shakespeare's time in Britain. We have four charitable "heads" – relief of poverty, advancement of education, advancement of religion and other purposes. They suited the period. Shakespearian England was a time of workhouses, no public schooling, and churches were central to communities. Over the years, case law has allowed other causes and activities to slip into the charity ranks through the fourth "other" category. But this has been limited, and our charitable classifications clearly favour older and more traditional charities. Great Britain, by the way, has abandoned the four heads. It has revamped and modernized its charity law, as have Australia, New Zealand and the USA. Charities in these countries are in a much better position to adapt to changing times than are Canadian charities.

In Canada 2010, we still require our charities to be beggars – their activities must be 100 per cent charitable. Raising money by operating a social enterprise is not considered charitable unless it is a narrowly defined "related business" such as a hospital parking lot or a training enterprise for participants requiring job training for a limited period of time. A charity's ability to earn income is closely regulated and based on a logic that has long since been lost to time.

You may be asking why this seemingly bizarre situation has been allowed to develop? The answer unfortunately is very Canadian. There is split jurisdiction. While the provinces have the constitutional responsibility to regulate charities, it is the Federal Government under the Income Tax Act that is responsible for authorizing charities to issue tax receipts for donations. Over the years, the Canada Revenue Agency has effectively taken over control of charities by linking regulation to its registration powers, and charities dare not complain. That is why for years charities have "made do," trying to work around the myriad of restrictions and regulations they face.

The sector is at a tipping point. If we want to make donations go further, if we want vibrant and healthy communities, we need charities and nonprofit organizations freed up to add earned income to their revenue sources to continue their good work.

Towards a New Paradigm

> What we need in addition to conventional charitable giving is a new way to think about philanthropy and the achievement of social goals. We are at a point in our nation's history where we can do this. All the elements are there. We have a history of progressive social policy. We have social entrepreneurs who are already running successful operations. We have a charitable and voluntary sector that is the second largest in the world.… The business entrepreneur improves our quality of life by creating wealth and economic growth. The social entrepreneur improves our quality of life by confronting the inequality that is often the collateral occurrence of free markets. Both kinds of entrepreneurs are necessary. Let us give them both the chance to succeed.

A.SOCIAL ENTERPRISE—THE HORIZON

Over the past two decades, there has been a rapid global development in the area of social enterprise. As a result, various governments have taken steps in enacting legislation to encourage the continued development of social enterprise. For example,in 2005, the United Kingdom enacted a new legislative framework to enable the creation of a new type of company for social enterprise known as the "Community Interest Company" or "CIC."In the United States, the State of Vermont passed legislation on April 30, 2008 that enables the creation of a new type of legal entity called the"Low-Profit Limited Liability Company" or "L3C." Since then, L3C legislation has been developing rapidly in a number of other American states.

In Canada, there has also been an increasing interest in engaging in social enterprise. However, there has been a lack of coordinated focus on the legal and organizational infrastructure to facilitate social enterprise in Canada. This paper is not intended to propose asolution to facilitate the development of social enterprise in Canada. Instead, this paper reviews the current Canadian regime regulating business activities of charities (which has shown a lot of interest in engaging in social enterprises), the driving forces behind social enterprise that would need to be addressed, what lessons may be learned from the American and British development of hybrid entities for social enterprise, and considerations that would need to be addressed when developing a social enterprise option for Canada.

1.What is social enterprise?

The meaning of "social enterprise" varies and has evolved over time, depending on the context in which this term is defined. It has been pointed out that "in its most basic form, a social enterprise is a business dedicated to a social mission, or earning a profit for the financial furtherance of a social mission, although these are likely not the sole reasons for existence." It is interesting to note that social enterprise is sometimes referred as the "fourth sector" as follows:

> They point to an emerging "Fourth Sector" of social enterprise organizations that combine charitable missions, corporate methods, and social and environmental consciousness in ways that transcend traditional business and philanthropy. This new generation of hybrid organizations is taking root in a fertile space between the corporate world, which is constrained by its duty to generate profits for shareholders, and the nonprofit world, which often lacks the market efficiencies of commercial enterprise.

The following is a very helpful definition of "social entrepreneurship":

> Social entrepreneurship is the work of a social entrepreneur. A social entrepreneur is someone who recognizes a social problem and uses entrepreneurial principles to organize, create, and manage a venture to make social change. Whereas a business entrepreneurtypically measures performance in profit and return, a social entrepreneur assesses success in terms of the impact s/he has on society. While social entrepreneurs often work through nonprofits and citizen groups, many work in the private and governmental sectors.

It has been pointed out that by blending some of the social and economic responsibilities traditionally associated with each of the three sectors, social entrepreneurship may take the form of a non-profit, business, or government initiative.

Bring the Provinces Back In

Canadian charities, despite their ubiquity and multi-billion dollar financial power, operate in a regulatory environment where tax bureaucrats decide social policy, regulation is indirect, and charities are often stymied in their creation and development. The problem stems from the general refusal of the provinces to exercise their constitutional authority to govern the area. On the other hand, the Federal government, which does not have any jurisdiction in the area, has filled the vacuum by taking on the role of regulator. To assume this role, the Federal government relies on its power to levy the income tax, and only allows donors tax credits from donations to charities registered with the government. The government, through the Canada Revenue Agency (the CRA), then requires the charity to comply with regulatory rules masked as requirements for registration.

However, regulating by disguise has its limits, and the growing size and importance of the sector demand that both the provinces and the federal government create a joint Charities Council to regulate the sector effectively.

There are several problems with the current system. For one, donating to charities entitles the donor to pay reduced taxes, but the CRA's primary mandate is to maintain the integrity of the tax base. Thus, the CRA has an incentive to minimize the impact of donations through rules regarding donations and by limiting the number of registered charities.

Secondly, a registration system is no substitute for a regulation system. Under our current system, the most severe penalties involve suspending or revoking a charity's registration. On the other hand, a regulatory system could levy financial or criminal penalties against both the charity and its directors. Moreover, a proper regulatory system creates an infinitely more nuanced set of forbidden activities because of its capacity for more nuanced penalties. So for example, directives could be issued which that relate to specific fact situations rather than banning all activities and relying on the discretion of the public service to implement them appropriately.

Finally, and perhaps most worrisome, is that the current system requires tax officials to make social policy decisions. In particular, the CRA must make decisions regarding what qualifies as a charity (for example, whether a system of belief qualifies as a religion) and whether a charity is engaging in a forbidden political activity. As a rule, governments avoid deciding what qualifies as a religion. Yet here, not only is government actively involved in deciding which religions will have the support of our tax dollars (through the donation tax credit), but the government arm making that decision employs tax bureaucrats rather than people specially trained in the area.

There are several consequences of this ill-conceived system. First, new charities are stymied in their registration. Second, registered charities lack a proper regulatory environment. And third, the CRA is forced into a conflicted position to the detriment of all Canadians.

Fundamentally, the best way to fix this problem is to involve the provinces in regulating charities because the provinces have clear authority to do so. The federal government must also be involved, both to help foster a harmonized set of rules across the country and because of its role in collecting the income tax. Both levels of government should be brought together soon to form a Canadian Charities Council which would be responsible for registering new charitable organizations, regulating them, and adjudicating disputes arising from the new system.

Registration for income tax purposes would be contingent and automatic upon registration as a charity by the Council. As each province would be legally required to delegate authority to the Council, charities in a non-participating province would not be registered for income tax purposes. This would encourage a harmonized set of rules.

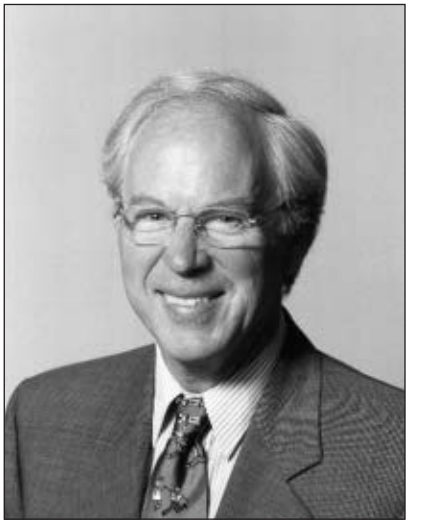

This plan will not create a layer of bureaucracy which that was not originally intended by the Constitution. The Council would assume the duties of 'registration' and non-tax duties currently performed by the CRA (but hopefully at the more comprehensive level their jurisdiction would allow). The CRA and the Department of Finance would remain responsible for tax related implications of registration. One also imagines that there is a role for the sector itself in providing input and representation to the Council.

Ultimately, the Council's mandate would be to create and enforce proper regulations which both promote the sector and ensure that Canadians are being well served by their tax dollars.

An Innovation Agenda for Canada's Community Sector

So, is it over? Can we re-boot to "business as usual?" bank profits are up, unemployment down. Was it just another blip in the boom-and-bust cycles of the market or the harbinger of a more significant and permanent change in our economy? If the latter, what does it mean for Canadians' well-being? What should the community sector – those organizations, associations, and voluntary bodies that contribute so much to the quality of life in our communities – do to prepare itself?

This article will argue from the premise that Canadians are living through a transformation that has been accelerated, but not caused, by the economic downturn we are experiencing. More specifically, it will explore some of the implications of this for Canada's voluntary or community sector (I prefer the term community, as voluntary is often misunderstood to mean volunteer). It will also argue that new models and approaches are urgently required, not just to ensure the health of a sector too long taken for granted in the public realm but to maintain Canadians' well-being.

New methods and approaches are disruptive. If we believe we face short-term strains, we will respond in traditional ways, tightening belts, and getting on with it; but if we believe we are now in a world of constant, accelerating change, we must become leaders in making Canada and Canadians more resilient, adaptable, and creative in finding sustainable solutions to long-standing social challenges. The argument here is that it is time to re-think our operating models, our function, and our contribution to Canadian society, embracing innovation and reasserting our role as catalysts, community-builders, and creative problem-solvers.

Change: cyclical or structural?

> The probabilities are very low that when we get through these times of great economic crisis that we're going to go back to a period of stability… the good news is that, properly framed, these are wonderful times because it is precisely in times like these when opportunities for massive and lasting contributions go up.
> Jim Collins, author of Good to Great and the Social Sectors

Recessions, stock market bubbles, and persistent government deficits are not unusual; growth eventually returns, and the 1990s showed that it is possible for determined government action to eliminate deficits and even run recurrent surpluses. The current recession is already officially over, and we are assured daily that we will shortly be enjoying renewed growth and prosperity (as the federal government's current advertising campaign asserts: We will come out of this stronger than ever!).

Deeper structural changes, however, affect Canada now: the birth-pangs of the so-called "green" economy, an aging population and the low (or nonexistent) growth of our work-force, and the eastward move of the global economy's centre of gravity to Asia, The dynamic economies emerging in Asia and Latin America create a competitive environment in which Canada's lagging productivity (now at only 75% of the U.S. level), deteriorating infrastructure, and often change-resistant institutions put us increasingly at a disadvantage. The present economic shock has accentuated the contrast between the demands of the "old" industrial and natural resource-based economy, exemplified by the automotive and forestry industries, and the need to invest in a new economy based on knowledge, technology, and innovation. In choosing between bailing out General Motors or Nortel, rhetoric about the "knowledge economy" proved no match for the reality of thousands of present-day industrial jobs.

New technologies are profoundly altering mature industrial economies, creating opportunities but also requiring painful adjustments. Workers who have seen their jobs migrate to cheap labour countries are assured that Canadians will move upstream to higher value and better paying occupations in the knowledge economy. Economist Jeff Rubin begs to differ: he argues in his recent book Why Your World is Going to Get a Whole Lot Smaller that the rising cost of oil will overturn the rationale for much off-shored production, even throwing globalization into reverse as countries and communities turn to local sources for food and lower value manufactured goods. Ironically, it may be that new information and communications technologies make it easiest to outsource some services, including the higher value-added items like software design, engineering, and basic research.

NOTE 1:

La majorité des organismes sont classés par leur activité principale. Certains organismes apparaissent dans plus d'une catégorie lorsque leurs activités sont de nature très différentes.

Pour plus d'informations sur les activités d'un organisme, se reporter à « But » dans la liste principale.

NOTE 2:

Plusieurs organismes avec un numéro d'enregistrement de charité à Revenue Canada ne collectent pas de fonds de façon active ou sont supportés principalement par leurs membres respectifs.

La liste suivante présente les types d'organismes qui n'apparaissent que très peu dans le guide:

- Départements et agences gouvernementals
- Ecoles publiques et leurs conseils d'administration
- Associations professionnelles et industrielles
- Clubs de services communautaires

De plus, comme il y a plusieurs organismes locaux, régionnaux et nationaux connexes et/ou qui sont intéressés par le même travail, les organismes locaux ne sont généralement pas inclus dans le guide. Nous vous suggérons de contacter le bureau régional ou national de l'organisme désiré afin de trouver un groupe local particulier.

We're okay with playing a supporting role.

We've been doing it since 1986. In that time, we've funded more than $10 million in capital, program and service improvements at our local hospital. Because we're in a rural part of Nova Scotia, we're pretty proud of the fact that folks here can get the care they need at home. We've spent our time working quietly in the background; building trust, carefully managing donor gifts and consistently delivering on our objectives. For us, it's as much about helping our community to be self-reliant as it is about state-of-the-art technology and medical advances.

So at the end of the day, when our health care colleagues are the ones who get to see the smiles on patients' faces, we know we're doing our part.

You Can Provide Hope and Help to People with ALS....

Through a planned gift to the ALS Society of Canada.

ALS SLA

The central mission of the ALS Society of Canada is to fund research. ALS Canada is the only voluntary health organization in Canada dedicated to funding research for a cure and treatment of ALS.

We also support provincial ALS societies in their provision of quality care for those living with ALS and strive to build awareness about the disease.

ALS, also known as Lou Gehrig's disease, is one of the most devastating neurodegenerative diseases.

Three letters that change people's lives. FOREVER.

Amnesty International

is a worldwide, voluntary movement that works impartially to promote and protect the fundamental human rights of all people. These universal values include freedom of expression and belief and the right not to be subjected to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment.

Amnesty International depends on the support of individuals, not governments, to carry out its lifesaving work. Your contribution enables Amnesty to continue its crucial research and campaigning on behalf of the victims of human rights violations around the world.

Winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, Amnesty International promotes public awareness and understanding of the full range of human rights as set out in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Nearly three million people in 150 countries are Amnesty supporters.

AWFC grants and programs are administered by an all volunteer Board of Trustees, composed of veterinarians, animal welfare scientists and other professionals who have broad experience of animal protection in Canada and in the evaluation of grant requests and project outcomes.

Whether you want to help companion, farm, wild or exotic animals, your gift to the AWFC will have many returns. For the animals, and for you.

Que vous souhaitiez aider des animaux de compagnie, de ferme, sauvages ou exotiques, le don que vous ferez à la FBAC suscitera de nombreux avantages…pour les animaux et pour vous.

Leave your mark on Science

Liz spends everyday in pain. She never leaves home and can't enjoy the life of an average 20 year old. Living with osteoarthritis, she is just one of 4.5 million Canadians hoping for a cure for over 115 forms of arthritis and autoimmune diseases because there are no cures – yet.

The Arthritis & Autoimmunity Research Centre Foundation's vision is to fund research which will beat arthritis and these chronic diseases.

A planned gift to the AARC Foundation can put the power of research to work at University Health Network in Toronto and make a positive difference in the lives of those living with these illnesses. And when we beat arthritis, we'll beat rheumatoid arthritis, we'll beat lupus, we'll beat scleroderma, we'll beat ankylosing spondylitis, we'll beat osteoarthritis …we'll beat them all.

Voici votre chance d'insuffler la vie à la prochaine génération

Un Canadien sur cinq souffre d'une maladie pulmonaire.

Chacun d'entre nous respirera beaucoup mieux lorsque l'air sera propre et sain.

Pour ce faire, nous travaillons à la prévention, l'éducation et soutenons nos chercheurs afin d'en arriver à réduire le nombre de personnes souffrant d'une maladie respiratoire au Canada, et surtout, pour que nos enfants puissent jouer dehors sans craindre une crise d'asthme.

Vous pouvez donc sauver des vies grâce à un don planifié en l'inscrivant sur votre testament.

Pour en savoir plus, consultez www.poumon.ca ou communiquez avec votre Association pulmonaire locale.

AUTISM SUPPORT DOGS

Use your vision to support Autism

Autism Support Dogs

Our Autism Support Dog program improves the quality of life of families with autistic children. We provide a fully-trained dog to the family, with training and support, to ensure that the dog works to the maximum of its abilities.

An Autism Support Dog can allow the child to participate in education, social and leisure activities, as the dog reduces the stress associated with interacting with other people and getting involved in social situations. It will help bring safety not just for the children but also for their parents.

Plan today for a visionary gift that ensures our ability to turn out internationally renowned 'well-finished' support dogs, for years to come.

Dylan & Logan Friends forever

Your gift through a bequest, annuity, property or life insurance makes a world of difference to children and families living with Autism—a world made better through independence, safety, and companionship.

BOURSE
AWARD

Character. Service. Leadership.

Invest in the future by making a bequest or planned gift in support of the Loran Awards, the most comprehensive merit scholarship in Canada.

Granted by the Canadian Merit Scholarship Foundation, each Loran Award comprises an annual stipend of $8,000 matched by a tuition waiver up to the same amount, mentorship, and access to summer internship opportunities. The awards are renewable for up to four years of undergraduate study and are tenable at any of 24 Canadian universities. More than 80 one-time awards are also granted annually.

Why choose the Loran Awards?

- We have the most thorough assessment process in the country. We look for breadth in academic and extracurricular interests, commitment to service, integrity, entrepreneurial energy, independence of thought and willingness to take on meaningful risks.
- Loran Awards reach students across Canada — small towns and large urbans centres in every province.
- Funding is leveraged through matching tuition waivers from our partner universities. Students are free to choose the best university and program for them in Canada.
- We have a 20-year track record of selecting and supporting the next generation of leaders.
- We have professional management and a distinguished board of directors.

Please contact Chris Cowperthwaite to discuss planning your bequest or other planned gift at 1-866-544-2673, x223.

Thank you for supporting our Canadian missions

Since 1908, CATHOLIC MISSIONS IN CANADA has helped extend the blessings of the Catholic faith throughout Canada.

Catholic missions are found in every region of Canada where the population is either too small or the economic situation too fragile for the people to support their local church.

In 2011, Catholic Missions In Canada will need $4.4 million to support our Canadian missions.

Be an Informed Donor

Soyez un donateur averti

Registered charities in Canada perform valuable work in our communities. Be an informed donor and ensure that your donations support these important efforts by taking the following steps:

- Consult the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) Charities Listings at cra.gc.ca/donors or call 1-800-267-2384 to confirm that a charity is registered with the CRA.
- Confirm that you will receive an official donation receipt if you want to claim a tax credit.
- Beware of schemes that promise tax savings greater than your cost, thus allowing you to "profit" from donating to a registered charity.
- Write cheques payable to the charity, not an individual.
- Do not donate if there is inappropriate pressure to give immediately or if there are signs of fraud, such as being offered a receipt for more than you actually donate.

BE AN INFORMED DONOR.
cra.gc.ca/donors

Les organismes de bienfaisance enregistrés du Canada effectuent un travail de grande valeur dans nos communautés. Soyez un donateur averti et assurez-vous que vos dons appuient leurs importants efforts en suivant les étapes suivantes :

- Consultez la liste des organismes de bienfaisance de l'Agence du revenu du Canada (ARC) en ligne à www.arc.gc.ca/donateurs ou composez le 1-888-892-5667 pour confirmer qu'un organisme de bienfaisance est enregistré auprès de l'ARC.
- Confirmez que vous recevrez un reçu officiel de don si vous voulez demander un crédit d'impôt.
- Méfiez-vous des stratagèmes qui vous promettent de « tirer profit » de vos dons à un organisme de bienfaisance en bénéficiant d'économies d'impôt plus importantes que les coûts qu'elles entraînent.
- Faites des chèques à l'ordre de l'organisme de bienfaisance et non à l'ordre d'une personne.
- Refusez de donner si on exerce des pressions indues sur vous pour que vous donniez immédiatement, ou encore si vous remarquez des signes de fraude, par exemple si on vous offre de vous remettre un reçu pour une somme supérieure à ce que vous avez donné.

SOYEZ UN DONATEUR AVERTI.

Your legacy will live on. And on.

A donkey can live for up to (and often more than) forty years. So you can imagine how your gift be well appreciated – in terms of shelter, food and care – for many many years by the remarkable animals we've rescued. To speak with us about making a bequest, call 519.836.1697 or email info@thedonkeysanctuary.ca. Thanks so much for thinking of us, and the donkeys.

Philanthropy and Estate Services

CENTRED ON YOUR PRIORITIES

Scotia Private Client Group®

The Benefits of Integrated Solutions

The most significant charitable gifts are typically part of a Will and estate plan. While not everyone includes charitable giving in their estate plans, for those who do philanthropy is a key priority.

Scotia Private Client Group is a national leader in philanthropic planning and solutions. Our Philanthropy and Estate Services extend to serving as executor of estates and trustee of ongoing trusts. Our clients benefit from customized, tax-efficient strategies that align their investment, retirement, philanthropic and estate plans to help ensure financial well-being into the next generation.

Philanthropic Advisory Services

As the largest provider of Philanthropic Advisory Services to private foundations in Canada, we help clients create meaningful legacies. With innovative solutions to facilitate charitable intentions, our specialists can help establish, manage and administer private foundations and donor advised funds. We also provide assistance with planned gifts to individual charities that satisfy personal, tax, and philanthropic goals.

Our focus is on sophisticated and objective planning in support of true philanthropy. Through advice, service and working with independent lawyers, accountants and other professional advisors we deliver strategies that help balance family priorities and support philanthropic goals.

Aqueduct Foundation

Aqueduct Foundation is a registered public foundation (administered by Scotiatrust) with donor advised funds. Donor advised funds are personal charitable accounts that enable strategic giving in support of your various charitable interests. Through smart, flexible philanthropic planning, Aqueduct Foundation offers opportunities for tax-effective giving that are integrated into estate plans of varying complexity. Aqueduct's Foundation's donor advised fund model offers unrivalled flexibility in the choice of charities and timing of gifts, including gifts of capital.

Aqueduct Foundation is committed to creating personal legacies that provide ongoing support for the donor's favourite charitable causes. Each legacy fund is named and designed to reflect the priorities of the founding individual and/or family. Donors are encouraged to include a short biographical statement to ensure their values and wishes are understood by future generations.

Will and Estate Planning

Where appointed an Executor (Liquidator in Quebec) and/or Trustee under a client's Will we can assist in developing an estate plan aligned with a client's overall goals. We will work with the client's lawyer to create the Will and related documents, such as Powers of Attorney (mandate in Quebec) and trust deeds. We will maintain the documents in safe-keeping and periodically review the plan to help ensure it continues to meet the client's needs.

We administer, settle and manage estates and trusts of varying complexity and value in our capacity as Executor and/or Trustee. In many cases, we work with designated family members to help ensure the estate is administered in a professional and empathetic manner. In addition, we provide financial advice, practical support, and guidance to beneficiaries.

Philanthropy and Estate Services are provided by Scotia Private Client Group in our Centres across Canada.

Be an Informed Donor

Soyez un donateur averti

Registered charities in Canada perform valuable work in our communities. Be an informed donor and ensure that your donations support these important efforts by taking the following steps:

- Consult the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) Charities Listings at cra.gc.ca/donors or call 1-800-267-2384 to confirm that a charity is registered with the CRA.
- Confirm that you will receive an official donation receipt if you want to claim a tax credit.
- Beware of schemes that promise tax savings greater than your cost, thus allowing you to "profit" from donating to a registered charity.
- Write cheques payable to the charity, not an individual.
- Do not donate if there is inappropriate pressure to give immediately or if there are signs of fraud, such as being offered a receipt for more than you actually donate.

BE AN INFORMED DONOR.
cra.gc.ca/donors

Les organismes de bienfaisance enregistrés du Canada effectuent un travail de grande valeur dans nos communautés. Soyez un donateur averti et assurez-vous que vos dons appuient leurs importants efforts en suivant les étapes suivantes :

- Consultez la liste des organismes de bienfaisance de l'Agence du revenu du Canada (ARC) en ligne à www.arc.gc.ca/donateurs ou composez le 1-888-892-5667 pour confirmer qu'un organisme de bienfaisance est enregistré auprès de l'ARC.
- Confirmez que vous recevrez un reçu officiel de don si vous voulez demander un crédit d'impôt.
- Méfiez-vous des stratagèmes qui vous promettent de « tirer profit » de vos dons à un organisme de bienfaisance en bénéficiant d'économies d'impôt plus importantes que les coûts qu'elles entraînent.
- Faites des chèques à l'ordre de l'organisme de bienfaisance et non à l'ordre d'une personne.
- Refusez de donner si on exerce des pressions indues sur vous pour que vous donniez immédiatement, ou encore si vous remarquez des signes de fraude, par exemple si on vous offre de vous remettre un reçu pour une somme supérieure à ce que vous avez donné.

SOYEZ UN DONATEUR AVERTI.

Your chance to breathe life into the next generation.

One in five Canadians suffer from lung disease. We will all breathe easier when the air is clean and healthy, people are free from cigarette addiction and debilitating lung disease, and children no longer breathe dirty air or fear an asthma attack.

You can save lives by making a legacy gift in your will for lung health.

Visit www.lung.ca to find out more or contact your local Lung Association office listed on the right.

Purpose: New Israel Fund of Canada (NIFC) works with its partner the New Israel Fund (NIF) to strengthen Israel's democracy, promoting freedom, justice and equality for all Israel's citizens as envisioned in her Declaration of Independence. With over thirty years of experience in addressing some of Israel's greatest internal challenges such as religious pluralism, widening economic gaps and domestic violence, NIF has had a significant impact on building civil society in Israel and empowering grass-roots organizations dealing with Israel's most marginalized groups. According to Israel's newspaper Haaretz "There is hardly any significant socially-oriented organization in Israel today that does not owe its existence to the NIF." NIFC is a winner of a GreatNonProfits Jewish Choice Award.

Ontario Shores
Foundation for Mental Health

Building a foundation of hope for the future.

One in five people will experience a mental illness severe enough to affect their daily activities…. and four in five will know someone who does.

Building on 90 years of experience and with a renewed mission and vision, Ontario Shores Centre for Mental Health Sciences is helping people with mental illnesses recover and sustain their best health. Focused on innovative care, teaching, research, and reducing the stigma that keeps people from seeking help, Ontario Shores is inspiring hope for patients and their families. Your gift will help more people ask for, and receive, the expert help they need.

Purpose: Our mandate is to raise funds and awareness for the conservation of Ontario's fish and wildlife habitat through research and restoration. Our strength is finding funding partners on conservation projects and conservation education programs. Our primary challenges are loss of habitat and the disconnection of our youth from nature. Without that connection, future support for conservation work will be severely diminished and our wildlife will suffer. That's why conservation education programs are just as important as habitat rehabilitation projects. Your donation can make a world of difference for Ontario fish and wildlife.

Save the Children is the world's largest independent organization advocating for children's rights in the world today. Without political or religious affiliation, we serve children in over 120 countries. Since 1921, we have delivered development assistance and emergency relief for children and their families in Canada and countries worldwide. We partner with local groups and communities to provide long-term solutions in the following areas:

- Education
- Child Protection
- Child Rights
- HIV/AIDS
- Emergency Relief
- Health and Nutrition

Save the Children works in close partnership with estate lawyers and allied professionals to meet the needs of donors who want to make a gift that will impact the future of children. Recognizing that gifts of capital assets make sense when an opportunity appeals to both the head and the heart, we provide a wide range of giving solutions to assist you. We can help plan a gift that provides the greatest benefit to the donor, the family and the children of the world through Save the Children Canada.

La Société de l'arthrite

gage d'espoir pour les générations prochaines

L'arthrite touche plus de 4 millions de Canadiens, y compris des enfants.

Depuis trois générations, la Société de l'arthrite travaille au mieux-être des personnes arthritiques du Canada.

Grâce à votre généreux appui sous la forme d'un don testamentaire, d'un don d'assurance, d'une rente de bienfaisance, d'un don de valeurs mobilières ou d'une fiducie résiduaire de bienfaisance, vous soutiendrez les générations prochaines dans leur lutte contre l'arthrite.

Votre don signifie de nouvelles découvertes, un espoir pour l'avenir, un traitement curatif.

Pour en savoir plus, téléphonez à votre bureau local de la Société de l'arthrite au 1.800.321.1433 ou visitez notre site Web à l'adresse www.arthrite.ca.

AU SUJET DES DONS DE CHARITÉ! QUELLES SONT LES IMPLICATIONS FINANCÈRES FACE AUX TAXES?

Le don planifié, un don pour l'espoir

Planifier un don en faveur de La Société de recherche sur le cancer c'est poser un geste de générosité en soutenant une cause qui touche chacun d'entre nous.

Un don planifié vous permet d'établir la façon la plus appropriée de donner à La Société de recherche sur le cancer, et ce, sans atténuer votre qualité de vie habituelle et celle de vos proches.

Voici quelques-unes des nombreuses possibilités qui s'offrent à vous afin d'appuyer le financement de la recherche.

- Le don testamentaire
- Le don de valeurs mobilières
- Le don de produits d'assurances-vie

Nous pouvons vous aider à planifier votre don. Communiquez avec notre service des dons majeurs et planifiés afin de connaître les avantages reliés à la planification d'un don à La Société de recherche sur le cancer.

Build with us
a Legacy of CARE

For 80 years Toronto East General Hospital has been at the heart of our community improving the health and lives of the people in east Toronto. We have done this through providing high quality complex health care in a warm and caring community hospital. We have done this because of people – health care providers, volunteers, visionaries and people like you.

To keep pace with the future we need your help. Please consider including Toronto East General Hospital in your Will. Leaving a bequest to our hospital is a very special, thoughtful donation and can make a huge impact on meeting the needs of our community for years to come.

We would be happy to work with you to make your gift the most personally satisfying and financially advantageous for you. For more information or a confidential consultation please contact Debbie Owen at (416) 469-6580 ext. 2161 or by email at dowen@tegh.on.ca.

We're discovering more reasons every day.

The facts are in. More women than men suffer from undetected heart disease. Women are twice as likely as men to experience depression. And younger women are the fastest growing group to be affected by both diabetes and skin cancer.

At Women's College Hospital we know that, when it comes to health, women and men are just not the same. That's why, for the past 100 years, we've been committed to groundbreaking advances in women's health.

Today, we're continuing to forge new ground with a 400,000 sq. ft. state-of-the-art building that will be an entirely new kind of hospital for women and their families.

A gift to Women's College Hospital means that we can continue to treat women differently. Nothing less will do.

" I am bringing hope to young girls and boys-in-need while honouring my son's memory." – Dianne Proctor

Christian Children's Fund of Canada

Helping children of all faiths

Bill loved working with children. He saw their potential and wanted every child to have the chance to reach it.

When Bill suddenly passed away, his mother Dianne wanted to bring something good out of a devastating tragedy. Bill's compassion for children-in-need was her inspiration.

Through a partnership with Christian Children's Fund of Canada, Dianne built a school in Bill's name in Ghana. Today, through the laughter of little children, Bill's spirit lives on.

Your gift – today or through a legacy plan – helps children and communities struggling with extreme poverty build strong sustainable futures. You can provide lifechanging resources like a well, a school, medical clinics and small business loans.

To learn more about Dianne's story and how you can help, please contact Dorothy Tam, CFRE Director, Major and Planned Gifts
